Colby High FFA group scores well in contests

For National FFA Week last week, Colby High School FFA members really fulfilled the year's theme of "Step Up, Stand Out."
 In addition to driving farm vehicles to school last Monday and serving a free "appreciation" breakfast to the community, they were busy with a bunch of other projects
 Last Wednesday, Feb. 26, they attended the district Ag Mechanics, Farm Power and Machinery, and Electrical Contest Northwest Kansas Technical College in Goodland.
 Chase Moore placed seventh among the top 10 individuals in the contest, said ag instructor Shawna Howell-Hoffman. Colby FFA as a team took third in the welding contest, fourth in the Ag Power events, and sixth in Electrical.
 In the Ag Mechanics division, Moore placed fifth and Tanner Corder was sixth, followed by Brandon Standage and Clayton Appelhans
 In the Farm Power and Machinery section, Matt Lindberg took fifth, followed by Corder, Moore and Appelhans.

 In the Electrical Power contest, Moore placed fourth, followed by Appelhans and Lindberg.
 "This is a young team which shows lots of potential," said Howell-Hoffman, who is the FFA advisor. "I'm very proud of the guys. They show tremendous leadership."
 Last year, the team placed first in the competition, she said.
 Last Thursday, the FFA group was at Colby Grade School to give demonstrations in partnership with Midwest Energy. Greg Swob of Midwest talked about natural gas safety. Students got to ignite a spark to blow the roof off a model house.
 Swob also spent some time talking about beekeeping with the kids. He said he started 30 years ago, quit for a time, and started again about four years ago as a hobby. He said he is building up his bee business.

Greg Swob of Midwest Energy helped Colby Grade School kindergarteners Alexis Bachman and Darren Sanders blow the roof off a model house during a demonstration last Thursday. The program was a part of FFA week and a continuing program called Partners in Active Learning Support, or PALS.
