Graduated licenses meant to save lives

Hanni said the reason the graduated license bill took so long to get passed in Kansas was because groups pushing for it didn't do a good job at presenting the issue to the public.

"It took time to educate people," he said.

Hanni said there are several reasons why teens are in more danger than other drivers. He told board members that we live in a different world today, with more people, more cars and more traffic than in the last century. There are more distractions for young drivers, including using cell phones, texting and other forms of technology.

A survey taken by the Center for the Study of Young Drivers, a group established by the University of North Carolina Highway Safety Research Center to improve the safety for teen drivers, showed that 89 percent of Kansans approved cell-phone restrictions for teen drivers. Another poll by the group showed that 65 percent of teens were in favor of the graduated license bill.

Hanni said a survey by the Centers for Disease Control showed that 39 percent of deaths among those 16 to 20 came in vehicle crashes. That makes car crashes the No. 1 killer within this age group.

Hanni showed graphs put together by the Journal of the American Medical Association that showed how the number of passengers in a young driver's car has a direct relation to the chances of him or her being involved in a fatal accident. The graphs showed that 16-year-olds with one passenger in their car are 39 percent more likely to be involved in a fatal accident. That increased to 182 percent when three or more passengers in the car. Seventeen-year-old drivers with two or more passengers in the car are 158 percent more likely to be involved in driving deaths. When the number of passengers is increased to three, the percentage jumps to 207 percent.

Hanni said that more fatalities occur in rural areas than cities. He said rural areas may have older, less safely designed roads, higher speeds, worse (or no) lighting at night, crashes are less likely to be reported immediately and higher rates of one-vehicle crashes.

Hanni said he is in favor of a primary violation law that would make anyone not wearing a seat belt eligible to receive a ticket. There is already a primary seat belt law for young teen drivers that went into effect on Jan. 1, 2008. The police can pull over teenage drivers and ticket them $60 plus court costs for not wearing a seat belt or for having passengers in their car that 17-years-old or younger not wearing seat belts.

Older drivers can only be given a ticket for not wearing a seatbelt if they are pulled over for another reason.

"Nationwide research shows about 56 to 60 percent of the public would be in favor of passing a primary violation law," said Hanni. "It would save lives and prevent injuries."

Exchange program opens visitors' eyes

The group discussed the similarities and differences between Kansas and Mexico.

Arminio said sports seem to be a lot more important to people in America than they are in Mexico. Soltero said students in the schools here dressed much more casually than they do in Mexico. She said in Mexican schools, students have to wear uniforms.

The religious atmosphere in Colby was also different than in Mexico, Soltero said. While in Mexico, the overwhelming majority of people are Catholic, here people practice many different religions, she said.
