In Loving Memory of Ward Adams September 4, 1915 - June 17, 1989

"Thanks Ward"
 by Harlan Thyfault

It was just a dingy little bar in a one horse college town
 But aggies came from near and far and laid their money down

The sign out front said "Trojan Inn" but "Ward's" was what it was called Owned by a man with a wide old grin and a head that was damned near bald

No prices were ever posted here, it was planned that way you see
 For what a hippie paid for a beer, us good old boys got three

The little old man behind the bar was wise beyond his years
 He'd seen it all, from roofing tar to killing Hereford steers

"By God I Know", he'd advise, the topic didn't matter
 His finger tapping emphasized, this wasn't idle chatter

"What do you know" someone might quiz at they came through the door
 "can't be smart 'n run a dump like this" we'd all heard that before

"Whatcha been doin' old boy" he cries to a guy who's dead on his feet
 "Been working cows since sunrise, haven't even had time to eat"

"Pickled turkey gizzards should be just right for you, they ain't as bad as they look
 So what if they're tough and the meat's kinda blue, at least you don't have to cook

There were puzzles and games made of horseshoes, and chains for those who chose just to think
 But plenty of brew was available too, if you really wanted to drink

When spring rains came and lots turned to muck, the floor was tough to keep clean
 He understood that and considered it luck, "A shiny floor makes the days take lean"

They all came in eventually, no matter their claim to fame, attorneys in suits, jocks in their sweats, cheerleaders after the game
 To cowboys it was a cowboy bar, though others might not agree, they all were assured the beer was cold and Wards advice was free

After all of these years I've come to conclude that the drawing points of that place
 Wasn't the beer, sure wasn't the food, but friends and the grin on old Ward's face

If we could go back as by magic we might, I know who'd have the last word
 It wouldn't be him, as on many a night, it simply would be "Thanks Ward"

We Love and Miss You.
