Department issues heat warning

Health and Environment reminds Kansans to protect themselves in hot summer temperatures. "When temperatures start to rise, it's important to know how to protect yourself and others, especially those who are at greater risk of heat-related illness," said Dr. Jason Eberhart-Phillips, health director and state health officer. "If you have a friend, relative or neighbor who doesn't have airconditioning, now would be a good time to talk with them about getting into a cooler place."

People who face the highest risk of heat-related illness include risk of sunburn. Infants should infants and children up to age 4, adults over 65, people who have chronic medical conditions (such as heart disease or being overweight), those taking certain medications and people who work or exercise in extreme heat.

Heat-related Illness

Heat-related illness is always of concern during hot weather, whether characterized as heat stress, heat exhaustion or heat

Heat stress includes faintness, painful muscle spasms and cramps and prickly heat caused by a skin rash from clogged pores. Heat stress is caused by loss of fluids and minerals in the body needed for proper muscle function.

Heat exhaustion, which is more serious, includes headache, dizziness, clammy skin, muscle fatigue, chest pain, breathing problems and nausea. Medical attention is necessary if these conditions per-

Heat stroke is a life-threatening condition that should be considered an emergency. Headache, hot and dry skin, temperature of 103 degrees or higher, rapid and shallow breathing, disorientation and changes in consciousness are all symptoms of heat stroke. The person should be cooled quickly with cold, wet sheets or a cool bath and taken to the nearest hospital. Staying Cool

Follow these steps to minimize

The Kansas Department of your risk of heat-related illness:

• Drink plenty of fluids, especially water. Avoid alcohol and caffeinated beverages, which dehydrate the body. Drink at least a gallon of water a day when spending time outdoors.

Wear loose-fitting and lightcolored clothing.

• When children play outdoors, dress them lightly, and make sure they take frequent breaks indoors and drink plenty of fluids. A child should never be left in a hot, closed car or near a sunny window. Also, young children should wear a sunscreen of SPF 50 to reduce their have very little or no contact with sunlight.

• Friends, relatives and neighbors of elderly people should periodically visit them during the summer months and take them to a cooler environment if needed.

• Eat light meals like fruit and salads. Eat apricots, bananas, cantaloupes, oranges, beans, broccoli, potatoes and tomatoes to increase potassium.

• Schedule outdoor activities for morning and evening, but avoid dawn and dusk due to the risk of mosquito-borne illnesses. When outdoors, try to stay in the shade.

 Use sunscreen and other measures such as wearing sunglasses to limit UV radiation.

Create airflow in hot indoor work areas.

• Spend most of your time indoors and in an air-conditioned room. If you do not have air conditioning, most larger towns have places where you can go during heat waves, including the local health department, senior citizen center, hospitals and Red Cross facilities. Basements are usually cooler than ground-level floors.

'til we meet again' dinner," she said.

Pabst said Schmidt has been involved in the community here and been really good for Colby.

"He's got a servant heart, and he'll be missed," she said. "We wish we could clone him!"

Schmidt has been an active member of the community throughout his time in Colby. He's been a Kiwanis Club member for almost four years, served on the board of Big Brothers Big Sisters for two, and been an integral part of the ministerial association, serving as convener for close to three years. He says there is good camaraderie among pastors here and has really enjoyed working with the association.

"There's strong community spirit in this town," Schmidt said.

Schmidt said one of the things he will miss about Colby are the sales at TNT Auction. He said he really likes the $1 boxes and has even found a few treasures over the years, like an am/fm shortwave

Schmidt's presence will also be missed at the Kiwanis Club. Club President Kalyn Ritter said Schmidt has been a regular face at all the meetings. He served on the membership committee and the
