Pool queries answered at town hall meeting is specialized work that can only be done by certain specialized contractors. Armstrong said engineers from Aquatic Design will have to prequalify pool builders before they can bid on the project.

Ray said he would prefer to see the work done by local people.

"If a dollar can stay in Colby, it should stay in Colby," he said.

McElyea said local firms will be able to bid on electric and plumbing jobs. Hiring locally for these jobs would cost less than hiring a firm from Denver or Kansas City, er people had to pay for our fire station?" he added.

Armstrong said if the pool and fire station are paid for and there is still money left over in the budget before the 10 years is up, the council would decide how to spend it. She said it could be spent on additional items for the pool or to pay off the bonds used to install lights at the recreation complex.

Bill Miller said he didn't think it was right to have people living outside the city help pay for the fire station through the sales tax.

"Where did the mindset come in that othhe asked.

Several council members said other area towns are doing the same thing.

They also said people from outside the city who stayed in hotels benefit from the fire station because they would be made safer if a fire did occur. They noted that if an accident occurred on the Interstate, the victims get help from the city fire department.

"It's a way of spreading out the costs," said Hutfles.

McElyea said the water park would be able to hold about 600 people. He said it would require about four acres of land, but the more they get, the better.

Armstrong said the city's fiscal agent estimated the interest rates for the pool and the fire station would both be 4 percent right now. She said she guessed the rates would be around 5 percent.

Mayor Ken Bieber said approving the sales tax increase would save the city about $462,000 on the fire station because the building would be paid off in 10 years instead of 20.

write "bills" and make policy recommendations to the state Legislature and governor on problems affecting the state's 412,000 senior citizens.

The "legislature" holds one annual session in the fall. The main focus for this year's session was to provide "available and affordable" transportation for seniors. Drafted for consideration this year was a bill to regulate predatory payday lending practices. These practices are most common in urban areas, where entire businesses are dedicated to predatory lending not only on pawned items, but paychecks, Social Security income and even income-tax refunds, the members said.

'The session was actually more than I expected," Hopper said. "We had some good speakers and we worked on bills that apply to more than just seniors.

"We also considered a bill concerning grandparents as caregivers. It would actually give grandparents a chance to not have their rights as a grandparent denied."

She said this years' session was held at the Ramada Inn, but she would be glad when the remodeling project at the Statehouse is finished so they can meet there.

"I would encourage anyone who wants to donate to the Silver-Haired Legislature to do so," she said, "because they are funded by donations and volunteer help.

"All donations are tax deductible." Contact Hopper at (785) 462-7709.
