Early octagonal house found

BLUFFTON, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina archaeologists believe they might have unearthed the first octagonal house in the United States.

The ruins were found last fall on the banks of the May River in the southern coastal town of Bluffton. A letter written in 1796 by a visitor mentions the octagonal house and helps date the structure.

Archaeologists Heather Cline and Mary Succi say the 900-square-foot house was owned by Scottish immigrant William McKimby and built about 1790.

That would mean the home predates Thomas Jefferson's Poplar Forest. That home, built in the 1820s near Lynchburg, Va., had been considered to be the first octagonal house in the U.S.

The director of archaeological restoration at Poplar Forest says he questions whether the find in South Carolina is a full-size home, however.
