Depression era comes alive for Colby

By Vera Sloan Andy Heintz and Kevin Bottrell

Five historic figures told stories of the Great Depression - with many lessons that apply today – under the tent at the Kansas-Nebraska Chautauqua last week and over the weekend.

If you didn't want to hear fun poked at a political party, you may not have wanted to listen to Doug Wilson's portrayal of Will Rogers. Rogers was not hard to pick out; Wilson looked the part even before the crowd heard him speak.

"The luckiest guy I know is Will Rogers, and I believe that a fella oughtta' say what he knows and sit down," he said as he began his introduction of President Franklin Roosevelt.

He rattled through the names of all the presidents he he had known on a first-name basis. His view of of Calvin Coolidge was typical in the language of his humorous style.

"Coolidge didn't talk much," he said. "He's what we in Oklahoma would call a 'tight chewer and a close spitter.' But he was sort of like everybody that runs for president. They all tell the people they'll take common sense to Washington, and then when they get there, nobody speaks the language, so they never get to use common sense.'

Rogers was known as a movie star, writer, broadcaster and a person who won the admiration of American audiences for his observations on life from a nonpartisan federal programs. viewpoint.

Wilson says he has performed the role more than 500 times nationwide in schools, theaters, libraries and Chautauquas. As moderator, Wilson introduced each had been after he took office. act.
