Public television wins Daytime Emmy Awards

The Public Broadcasting System remains the leader in children's programming, according to the Daytime Emmy Awards, says the head of Smoky Hills Public Television.
 For the 13th consecutive year, PBS won more awards for children's programming than any other broadcast or cable channel, said General Manager Lynn Meredith.
 Last weekend, PBS KIDS' won 15 Daytime Emmy Awards. "Sesame Street" won eight and "The Electric Company" five; the other winners were "Curious George" and "Trusted Guide," a PBS KIDS promotional spot.
 In addition, PBS swept all three major outstanding series awards, which went to "Sesame Street" (Outstanding Pre-School Children's Series), "The Electric Company" (Children's Series) and "Curious George" (Children's Animated Program). The "New Approaches" award went to "The Electric Company."
 "I am proud of the children's programming available on Smoky Hills Public Television," Meredith said. "These type of awards really highlight that Smoky Hills is a safe and trusted place for children and families."
 Smoky Hills, a nonprofit organization, provides programming for 71 counties in central and western Kansas.
