Spencer, pastor at the Church of Christ; C.W. Cheney, owner of MC Auto Outlet; Sacha Sanguinetti, general manager of radio station 100.3 KRQD/KXXX; and Jada Tubbs.

In other business, the board:

- Heard Keegan Nichols, vice president of student affairs and marketing, tell them Vera Sloan, society editor for the Colby Free Press, had been added to the committee that is focused on the future of the college pool. The group met this Tuesday.
- OK'd the resignation of Penni Britt, nursing instructor at the college, and Kathy Kadan, administrative assistant of Dean of External Affairs Barry Kaaz.
- Heard Alan Waites, vice president of business affairs at the college, tell them the college received $900,000 from the state in August. He said the college's cash balance in June was $1.3 million.
- Heard Marcie Ward, beef cattle program director, who said she bought small square grass hay bales from Reading, a town near Emporia. Kenton Kriebel, vice chairman of the board, said Ward should buy locally as much as she can. Ward, reached later by phone, said she buys locally except when it doesn't fit in with the costs of the budget and when she needs to have something in the hay that isn't available in Colby. Ward is also buying cane hay from Vickner Farms in Colby for $65 per ton.

- Heard Kreider was working with Adams, Brown, Beran and Ball to get the $80,000 originally meant to pay for weight equipment. The weights were going to be put in the new student fitness center with a wrestling room. This plan never came to fruition. Bryan Staats, accountant for Adams, Brown, Beran and Ball said they would be able encumber the $80,000 back into the fund it was in originally taken from after they get the results of an audit they did of the colleges 2009-2010 school year. The year ended on June 30, 2010.

Young entrepreneur breeds and sells Holland Lop rabbits in the rabbit business. This spring she sold over 30 rabbits as pets and 4-H projects. She says she breeds her does only two times a year, even though rabbits can be bred about every 30 days from February to October

Cassie said she's always liked rabbits and has learned a lot. She said they are born without any hair or fur, and she learned that the mother's milk is so nutritious the babies need to be fed only once a day. She said she leaves them alone for the first week, but as they get older she takes them out of their cages and plays with them every day for about 30 minutes.

"They aren't very much work," she said, "but they can't take a lot of heat, so at the fair, we have bottles of frozen water in the cages so they can lay beside them."

and averaged five or six babies per litter this spring, but her biggest litter ever, was seven babies. She would like to have more rabbits, and they have enough cages, she said, but she's just not tall enough to reach them. The rabbits stay outside in the winter, she said, with lots of straw to help keep them warm, and when their water freezes, she just pours hot water on top of the frozen water.

Rabbits aren't Cassie's only love. Besides a grand champion ribbon for her rabbit, she was awarded championship ribbons on her breeding heifer, reserve champion steer, reserve champion for intermediate beef showmanship, special merit for construction on her apron for the fashion review, open class champion cookies, blue open class quick bread and a blue and a red in other open class cookies.

She says she has four does now, Cassie left immediately after

Raising money for the Relay

VERA SLOAN/Colby Free Press

The Jeff Hartwell Stars, a group of 10- and 11-year-old girls and Trey Miller (not present) took on a hot job Tuesday when they pounded the streets to collect money for cancer research for Friday's Relay For Life activities at Fike Park in downtown Colby. Tuesday was the third anniversary of the death of Jeff Hartwell, dad of Jordan Hartwell, (pictured next to Kylee Hunter, Colby Free Press graphic designer) whose idea it was to help raise money for research.

the fair to spend some rest and relaxation time with grandma, and although she didn't say, after a busy summer, she's probably more than ready for the fall semester to start.
