TOPEKA — The 1st Congressional District of western and central Kansas hasn't been known for electing "movement" conservatives, even though it's one of the safest Republican districts in the nation. Yet voters are likely to elect one to the U.S. House this year.

The GOP nominee is state Sen. Tim Huelskamp of Fowler, among the Legislature's most conservative members on both social and money issues. He's an anti-abortion leader who's been a source of irritation for less-conservative GOP leaders at the Statehouse.

Huelskamp's reputation as an uncompromising conservative is a major issue for his Democratic opponent, former Salina Mayor Alan Jilka. But Huelskamp remains favored to win, largely because he's the Republican nominee.

And Huelskamp himself says he believes voters are looking this year for a conservative congressman who'll give no quarter to President Barack Obama and his fellow Democrats. He believes they want a U.S. House member who'll even scrap with fellow Republicans if they abandon small-government, low-tax and traditional-values positions.

"It's a very good match, particularly this year," Huelskamp said about his candidacy during a recent interview. "There's certainly frustration and opposition to nearly the entire agenda of Barack Obama, and (U.S. House Speaker) Nancy Pelosi and (U.S. Senate Majority Leader) Harry Reid and nearly every Democrat tied to that."

Like any Democrat running for major office in Kansas, Jilka hopes to peel GOP moderates away from the Republican nominee. He thinks that task is made less difficult because Huelskamp is the GOP candidate.

Jilka does distance himself from national Democrats, of course. Like Huelskamp, he's Catholic and an abortion opponent. Jilka is wary of "cap-and-trade" proposals aimed at limiting carbon dioxide emissions, and he agrees that Pelosi, who's from San Francisco, is unlikely to understand western Kansas.

But he also argues that he's far more likely to get something done in Congress than Huelskamp and points to Huelskamp's reputation.

"If you want a blind, polarizing ideologue, he's certainly your guy, but I don't think that's what people are looking for," Jilka said. "I think people think we already have enough partisanship, blind partisanship, in Washington."

The seat for the 69-county district is open because Republican incumbent Jerry Moran is running for the U.S. Senate. Huelskamp emerged from a six-person primary with 35 percent of the vote, while Jilka had no primary opponent. A Libertarian candidate, Jack Warner, of Wright, also is on the Nov. 2 general election ballot.

Huelskamp, a farmer and rancher, was first elected to the state Senate in 1996 and re-elected three times. Jilka, whose family operates a furniture store in Salina, served 12 years on its city commission and three times as mayor. He ran unsuccessfully for the state Senate in 2004.

Jilka acknowledges that history is against any Democrat. Since western Kansas was incorporated into a single congressional district in 1962, the seat has been held by four Republicans. They are Bob Dole, of Russell, later the U.S. Senate majority leader and 1996 GOP presidential nominee; the late Keith Sebelius of Norton; Pat Roberts of Dodge City, now a U.S. senator; and Moran, from Hays.

"There hasn't been a competitive race in this district for decades," Jilka acknowledged. So what makes Jilka think he has a legitimate shot of winning? He said he views the district as "moderately conservative" and thinks voters want a problem solver, not an ideologue.

The district's past does suggest that. Dole's long congressional career was dotted with legislative accomplishments and, even with conservative views, he faced grumbling from the right as he ran for president in 1996. Roberts helped write major farm policy as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee and has support from both wings of the GOP as a senator. Moran has emulated Roberts in appealing to Republicans of different stripes and by doing hundreds of town hall meetings as a U.S. House member.

But Roberts and Moran are vocal critics of Obama, Pelosi and Reid, and consistent votes against Democrats' agenda.

Huelskamp said his conservatism meshes with the 1st's voters' views.

"We're a great fit for the district with our ag background," he said.

Finally, Huelskamp is undoubtedly helped by the rise of the tea party movement, which is looking to push what participants consider "RINOs" — Republicans in Name Only — out of the GOP.

Jilka said he doesn't worry about the national political mood because he can't control it anyway. But the climate, always highly favorable to a Republican in the 1st District, could help offset any problem Huelskamp might have from not seeming to quite fit with the Dole-Roberts-Moran tradition.

Jim and Travis, father and son, are not actually a part of the station staff, said Sanguinetti. Sanderson, who lives in Goodland, produces the show. Sanderson also finished second in "Complete Sportscast" for the "Tri-State Sports Report" on KRDO 100.3 FM, The Ride.

Chad Jones came in third in "DJ Personality Aircheck" for the "Chad Jones Morning Show" on KRDO 100.3 FM. Sanguinetti said this was the first on-air show Jones had done in several years.

The general manager said to win an award, you have turn in a recording of an episode to a panel of judges. Sanguinetti said the judging is done by personnel from radio stations in another state.
