Cosmosphere fest to focus on rockets, costumes, science

Rocketober-Fest at the Kansas Cosmosphere on Saturday, Oct. 23, is an afternoon of fun for the entire family.

Activities will include making buttons and solar-system bracelets, experiencing the 4-G simulator and watching weird science demos. Kids will be able to launch their own air rockets and enjoy liquid-oxygen ice cream, as well as other activities.

Students who come dressed as a space traveler or alien can enter the costume contest. Downtown Hutchinson and Walmart are providing gift cards for the winners. Register for the contest by 2 p.m. that day.

Some items require a Rocketober-Fest ticket and some are free.

The Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center is a nonprofit organization dedicated to enhancing knowledge of space exploration. For information, go to cosmo.org.

Take time now to evaluate garden

It's that time of the year again — the time I sit down and critically review my successes and failures of this past gardening season and do a little planning for the garden year to come.

Planning ahead, despite the fact that it will be six months before I plant a seed in next year's garden, allows me to think a little about my intentions for spring.

Despite the fact that I have all winter to plan, some of the most important procedures relating to next year's effort will take place this fall. The next two months are the time when I add amendments to the soil and just generally do what I can to increase the garden's fertility and richness after it has performed so well for me this past season.

So, lets talk about some of the successes this summer as well as a few of the failures.

For the second straight year, my most notable failure was my beets. Just like last year, the beets came up quickly, but after they began to set their first true leaves, something came along and ate them back all the way to the ground.

Like last year, I assume it was the bunnies, but I can't verify that, and nothing else was touched, including the young carrots, lettuce, spinach or radishes, all growing nearby. Next spring, I might put up a scarecrow or perhaps more logically, just not plant beets.

This was not a great onion year for me, for the first time in many years. There were plenty, certainly, but most of them just didn't attain the size they usually do. The Candy variety, usually my best, got off to a slow start and just didn't thrive. Some of them even put up a seed stalk early in the season. I had never seen that happen.

Here are my top five most pleasant harvests this year:

- Tomatoes! What a crop, my best ever. I have 32 of the healthiest, most productive plants I've ever had. As I've written before, I've been doing a little tomato experiment this summer, and I'll have the results for you in a couple of weeks.

- Sweet corn. This new variety called Marai sweet corn is simply wonderful, and I urge you to try it next year. It is absolutely the sweetest, most full flavored sweet corn I've ever grown.

- Green beans. Again this year, a bumper crop of Derby variety. Lots of fresh eating, canning and sales at the farmer's market.

- Potatoes. I found a new variety of white potato this year called Dakota Crisp, the largest, smoothest white potato I have grown. The Yukon Gold and Red Pontiac varieties were also very productive.

- Broccoli. I had 22 premium crop broccoli plants this year and I thought they were never going to start setting heads. But when they finally did, they were sensational. We froze about 25 bags for winter use, plus eating several heads fresh during the summer.

The beets notwithstanding, most everything did well this summer, thanks to superior seed varieties, a good rich soil, fall plowing and an excellent growing season. I think I'll try it again next summer!

New publication helps control bed bug trouble

They're tiny. They're secretive. And they've garnered media attention in recent weeks that would make a celebrity envious.

Bed bugs — or Cimex lectularis — are small, oval, wingless flattened insects that are about one-fifth inch long and they've been appearing in homes, hotels, dormitories and other locations throughout the country.

Kansas State University Research and Extension has developed a new publication to help homeowners, business owners and others identify and learn how to prevent or manage infestations. The publication can be found on line at www.ksre.ksu.edu/library/entml2/mf2926.pdf. It also is available through county and district K-State Research and Extension offices.

The four-page publication includes information about this pesky insect's life cycle, the damage its bites can cause, detection, prevention and management in the event of an infestation.

Further information about insects in Kansas is available on K-State's Department of Entomology website, www.entomology.ksu.edu/ and click on "diagnostician" and/or "Entomology Extension."

Thanks to folks representing Rexford

"May the Spirit of the Prairie Live On" was the title of the 125th Birthday Celebration of Thomas County on Saturday at the Colby Community Building.

The committee planned an excellent program for all Thomas County residents. Rexford Mayor Dennis Allison and Postmaster Mary Withers were recognized during the assembly, along with other elected officials and county workers. Linda Garrett was part of the revue of past and present, portraying the historical figure Mary Hay.

A special thank you to Rexford Lions Club members DeLores, Darrel, Darla and DeAnn Dible, and Mary Luna for preparing the tasty barbecue meal to feed everyone.

Rexford is a giving and forgiving community as we all work toward fostering the same prairie spirit as our ancestors did 125 years ago.

The community was saddened on hearing news of the passing of Darrel Leh Oct. 8 at Hays Medical Center. Heartfelt condolences to Marjorie and the family.

• Rexford Correspondent

I enjoyed playing bingo with the other 10 attending at the Red Barn on Saturday evening. Thank you, Vesta Roth, for being the caller.

If you're interested in joining the Book Club held at the Red Barn the first Tuesday of the month, contact Gail Williams.

Happy Birthday to Ron Dible, who celebrates today, Oct. 11.

Golden Plains Middle School and High School activities this week: 4 p.m. Tuesday, volleyball with Logan/Norton at Logan; 4 and 5:30 Thursday, Middle School volleyball and football with Triplains/Brewster at Rexford; 7 p.m. Friday, football with Wallace County at Rexford. Golden Plains Class of 2011 will be recognized along with parents during a Senior Night activity during half time of the football game.

Until next time, make your week memorable.
