Champion huskers compete in Oakley

longs to Gary and Raelene Keller.

Three volunteers go with each husker as they make their way down the row: a timer, a gleaner who checks for dropped ears or those left on the stalk and a driver for the cart. Dropped or missed ears are counted against the husker's score, but he or she can go back and pick them up. Oakley High FFA students volunteered as gleaners.

When the husker's time was up, they'd ride the cart back to the judging area, where their corn was collected into a steel drum and weighed. Any pieces of husk left on the corn ears counted against the overall weight, Swart said.

The town held several other activities to go along with the contest. A corn cookoff brought visitors to Oakley's Center Avenue on Friday. Cooks prepared corn dishes in the businesses for people to sample, and a panel of VIPs gave out awards in Oakley Chamber of Commerce gift certificates.

Saturday featured a crafting show at the 4-H building and Farmers Indoor Arena and an awards banquet and dance sponsored by the Oakley Area Pride Committee.

Dennis Schiel, who is creating a mural of Kansas for the state Capitol, was there to show off his work. Schiel has mostly finished the section covering northwest Kansas, which includes Oakley's Buffalo Bill statue and Colby's courthouse. Park said Schiel might add corn husking to the painting.

Volunteers shoveled picked ears of corn from carts to steel drums after each corn-husking contestant finished. The drums were weighed and penalties deducted for any husks left on the ears.

Cops finding more large-scale marijuana farms in Kansas

In Kansas, 12 outdoor marijuana plots and 1,463 cultivated marijuana plants were eradicated in 2008. Last year, that statistic jumped to 29 plots and 24,478 marijuana plants, including two 10,000-plant operations in Kingman and Sedgwick counties.

Both Page and Dave Mizell, assistant special agent overseeing DEA operations in Kansas, said organized crime groups running the operations move out of areas where there is pressure from law enforcement.

"When the heat is on them, they move away to where they think they are not as susceptible, like Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma," Mizell said. "The more significant operations we do believe are organized - their transportation is organized, they have a better understanding of how to coordinate the plant, and they're monitoring (the crop) and living there 24/7."

"Mainly, it's driven by where can we go where we cause the least suspicion and where can we make a profit," he added, referring to the mindset of those running the marijuana growing operations. "One expense is law enforcement detecting them and cutting down their product."

Contributors to decide on candidate's mustache

TOPEKA (AP) - Kansas Secretary of State Chris Biggs is letting supporters decide whether he'll regrow his mustache - as a campaign fund-raising gimmick.

Chris Biggs

Both the Democratic incumbent and Republican challenger Kris Kobach are clean-shaven.

But in an e-mail to supporters, Biggs notes a recent television report on the race showed an old picture of him with a mustache.

Biggs says people told him they liked the mustache but he'll let contributions settle the issue.

He's asking people who want him to regrow it to give donations starting with even numbers, such as $200. People who like his mustache-free can give amounts starting with odd numbers.
