The 7.5 percent cut in wages would save state government more than $16 million, but half of that money would be retained by the Kansas Board of Regents to be used to fund deferred maintenance projects on college campuses.

The plan also cuts aid to the 289 public school districts by $75 per pupil this year, reducing the amount from $4,012 to $3,937, or approximately $86 million.

The committee rejected an effort to increase funding by more than $16 million for the current year to avoid possible loss of federal funding for special education in 2013.

Committee members suggested the fees be paid from other sources. Senate President Steve Morris, a Hugoton Republican, is scheduled to become president of NCSL in August.

Speech frames 2012 debate

By Tom Raum

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON-President Barack Obama took a significant step toward retooling his presidency with a challenge to lawmakers to rise above partisan differences to tackle economic and budget problems "decades in the making."

And while there remained stark differences in approach between the president and the Republicans with whom he now shares power, Obama made some striking concessions in the name of national unity - and asked others to do the same.

In a State of the Union address made somber by the recent Arizona shootings, Obama on Tuesday night coupled a call for budget restraint with a plea for more American innovation to allow the United States to better compete in the global economy.

"The rules have changed" and the U.S. must not let itself be left behind by other fast-growing economies like China and India, Obama said.

Obama and newly empowered Republicans each framed their rival political themes, ones that will carry them to the 2012 elections.

Obama's speech was relatively subdued. "He avoided competing with his audience," said Wayne Fields, a professor at Washington University in St. Louis who studpresidential rhetoric. "They ies seemed as much a part of the show as he was. The message from both sides was that we're going to work together in a civil society.'

Obama's wish list included new government "investments" in education and infrastructure such as roads and bridges and more nations.

to include nuclear and so-called ties. 'clean coal."

"At stake is whether new jobs and industries take root in this country, or somewhere else," Obama said. "To win the future, we'll need to take on challenges that have been decades in the making.'

At the same time, Obama proposed deficit-cutting steps, including a five-year freeze in spending for some domestic programs. And he called for a reduction in the taxes corporations pay but "without raising the deficit.'

Republicans scoffed at Obama's concept of "investments" and suggested the president was merely seeking to continue a longtime spending spree. They've put tackling the nation's $14 trillion debt at the center of their agenda, beginning with spending cuts larger and sooner than Obama has proposed.

It's a goal that resonates with tea party factions within the GOP. Republicans assert that taming soaring deficits, not adding to the debt, will put the economy back on the path of growth and spur privatesector job growth.

Earlier Tuesday, the Republican-controlled House voted 256-165 to return most domestic agencies to 2008 budget levels, a largely symbolic vote.

Obama agrees that tackling trillion-dollar-plus annual deficits is a national priority - but a longrange one, not one that needs to be taken on too aggressively with the unemployment rate stubbornly stuck above 9 percent.

But even the House GOP effort at fiscal austerity would only make a small dent in the nation's debt.

"Americans are skeptical of market-opening deals with other both political parties, and that skepticism is justified - especially

Obama needs to win back independent voters, who helped him win the presidency in 2008 but deserted Democratic candidates in favor of Republicans in last November's midterm elections.

Despite their new clout, Republicans, too, are mindful that repeating the gains they made last November in the 2012 election cycle won't be a cakewalk - and need to avoid the possibility of gridlock.

be everything we needed for the stage, including more for props and it was free. We are seeking the use of potted plants and shrubbery too.'

There are only 11 weeks left before production date, Ogle said, and people interested in volunteering must come to the Monday informational meeting.

'We are looking to draw from a wide area," he said, "and it will be a great experience for everyone."

high-speed rail and high-speed Internet. And in a key concession, one that quickly riled environmentalists, Obama called for spending on clean-energy technology - but for the first time included nuclear power, "clean" coal and natural gas.

While praising a call by Obama to end oil subsidies, League of Conservation President Gene Karpinski said, "We object to his attempt to redefine clean energy

He called for more spending on when it comes to spending, said House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan, R-Wis., in a prepared text for the GOP response. "So hold us all accountable."

> And, trying to strike the same tone of congeniality that Obama used, Ryan praised the president for focusing on the economy and deficits. "He was right to do so, and some of his words were reassuring.

As they laid out their positions, the risks were high for both par-
