Governor signs law loosening regulations on telecom giant

By John Hanna

AP Political Writer

TOPEKA – Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback announced Wednesday that he'll sign a bill loosening regulation of AT&T Inc., and his spokeswoman said the measure helping the state's largest provider of local telephone service should improve the state's business climate.

Critics of the bill believe it could lead to higher monthly bills for thousands of Kansans who want only a single landline in their homes. The measure cleared the Legislature with large, bipartisan majorities, but some rural lawmakers were among its biggest critics.

The bill makes it easier for AT&T to avoid a state cap on rates for stand-alone, local landline service that still apply in many areas it serves. The measure still limits rates for poor families in a state "lifeline" program and says prices for basic local service in rural areas can't be higher than those in urban areas.

Brownback scheduled a billsigning ceremony for Thursday afternoon at an AT&T facility in the Kansas City-area suburb of Mission, with legislators and company's Kansas operations, expected to attend. The law will take effect July 1.

"This legislation will help modin our state, and we also believe to the rate of inflation. also increase the opportunities in wireless, at no expense to the landlines in deregulated exchangsaid Wednesday.

But David Springe, consumer counsel for the Citizens' Utility Ratepayers Board, a state agency, said the changes will hurt from 25 percent to 30 percent of consumers who want only basic landline service. He said many of them are elderly, and Kansas "has thrown these poor customers to the wolves."

"There's no question prices are going to go up," he said. "That's the only reason the bill is there. There is one area in telecommunications that is not completely deregulated."

A 2006 state law deregulated prices for bundles of services that include wireless, Internet access, cable television or other video. It also deregulated prices for local landline service in AT&T's biggest exchanges, Kansas City, Topeka and Wichita.

The same law said the Kansas Corporation Commission, which regulates utilities, could deregulate prices for local service in an exchange at a provider's request, if the company showed competition existed.

A commission report in February showed 59 of AT&T's exchanges have been deregulated Steve Hahn, the president of the and 75 remain under a price cap, most of them with fewer than 5,000 landlines. The cap limits annual rate increases for a single, stand-alone residential landline ernize communication policies and up to four business landlines

The new law says when a serfor investment in broadband and vice provider has a majority of woman Sherriene Jones-Sontag all of them deregulated. So far, encourage growth." only AT&T qualifies.

new law will make Kansas' regulation similar to that in other states - and to Kansas' regulation of cable companies and other potential competitors.

"The investment can go in areas consumers are increasingly in," said AT&T spokesman Aaron Catlin. "It allows the overall policy to

AT&T officials have said the consumers are moving away from landlines and toward wireless.

The commission report said the number of wireless subscribers in Kansas grew by 37 percent between December 2005 and December 2009, to almost 2.5 million. AT&T has about 560,000 landlines, down from nearly 900,000 in 2005.

Backers of the bill say they be-Supporters of the bill note that lieve prices for basic local landline service aren't likely to rise quickly, arguing that steep increases in urban areas will cost AT&T customers

But Rep. Forrest Knox, an Altoona Republican who opposed the bill, said many rural customers don't have the product choices that urban ones do.

MARIETTA, Ohio (AP) - Voters in one Ohio county who show their school pride at the polls next month will be asked to cover up with a poncho.

Elections officials in southeast Ohio's Washington County don't want people coming to polling places wearing shirts or other attire promoting local schools that have hotly contested tax measures on the ballot.

Those who do show up to vote on May 3 in a shirt, hat or other article of clothing with the name or mascot of one of the Marietta or Warren Local schools will be handed a poncho by a poll worker, county elections board director Peggy Byers said Friday. Voters will be allowed to wear school colors, she said.

The policy was first reported by WBNS-TV of Columbus.

The school tax issues are stirring up feelings that are "kind of intense either way," Byers said. "A lot of people are either real for them or real against them."

Voters in the Warren Local district are being asked to approve a measure to fund new school buildings at a cost of about $200 a year to the average taxpayer. It has already been rejected three times in the past year. Opponents are "disgruntled" that tax dollars have been used to put the issue on the ballot multiple times, but the district needs to replace its aging schools because of safety and other concerns, said Superintendent Tom Gibbs.

District faculty, staff and supporters have been asked to keep the school garb at home when they vote on May 3, he said.

The elections board voted unanimously to adopt its poncho policy this week to follow a state directive against displays of "campaign attire or paraphernalia" at polling places, Byers said.

Campaigning close to polling places is prohibited, said Matt McClellan, press secretary for Secretary of State Jon Husted. He said the office doesn't feel wearing a school shirt is electioneering but views it as a local issue.
