a substantial interest in it and probably would be working on it anyway, I just decided that we'd run it out of our office."

House Minority Leader Paul Davis, a Lawrence Democrat, also put himself on the committee. Its partisan split - 17 Republicans and six Democrats reflects the House's overall GOP majority, 92-33.

Similarly, the Senate, where Republicans have a 32-8 majority, has a redistricting committee with 10 Republicans and three Democrats.

Republican Gov. Sam Brownback took office in January, putting the GOP in a strong position entering the redistricting debate. Democrats also faced a GOP-dominated Legislature and Republican Gov. Bill Graves in 2002, but the Republican majorities were smaller.

"I recognize that this is, inherently, a partisan process and go into that with expectations that Democrats are probably not going to get their way, but we'll try to work together with them as best we can,' Davis said.

But population shifts are likely to be equally as important in drawing the lines, with many rural areas losing residents while urban and suburban areas gain them. Most legislators expect Johnson County, the state's most populous, to pick up seats in the Legislature.

Governor's arts commission veto starts national debate on art funding

By John Hanna

TOPEKA - Gov. Sam Brownback pushed Kansas into a national debate over the scope of government by making his state the first to shut down its arts agency and eliminate funding for arts programs, leading one group Tuesday to call the state "a huge outlier" in how it treats the arts.

But Brownback predicted other states will follow Kansas' lead.

"While we may be a trend-setter now in the area, I think you're going to see a number of states pursue this very same avenue," Brownback told reporters. "This is a good trend. It's so that you focus your budget items in core areas more so than in areas that we can afford to pay for off the private side."

An effort today by the House to override the veto failed to get the 2/3 majority necessary.

The chief executive officer of Americans for the Arts, based in Washington, said Brownback's decision last week to veto the entire Kansas Arts Commission budget goes against "a half-century understanding" in the U.S. that government has a role in promoting the arts. He also suggested the Republican governor's actions violate pledges from his campaign last year to improve the economy.

"It's a huge outlier," Robert Lynch, CEO of Americans for the Arts, said during an interview with the Associated Press. "It's the only such decision made this year or in the past 50 years.'

Some fiscal conservatives contend Americans, concerned about a $200,000 subsidy for the new spending, are rethinking whether foundation in the state historical taxpayer dollars should support society's budget, but the Legislathe arts. Alan Cobb, director of ture put all arts funding in the Arts Commission's budget - meaning state operations for the smallgovernment group Americans none survived the governor's acfor Prosperity, said criticism of tions. Brownback's actions is overheat-Brownback's actions jeopardize ed. "If this happened across the several thousand jobs tied directly country, we will still have great art to arts programs and others supmuseums and symphony orchesported by the spending of arts patras," Cobb said. "We can't do evtrons. erything, so let's figure out what ing have been pursued in several states, including New Hampshire, Texas and Washington, but Kansas is the first where such an effort has come to fruition. Vermont has a private, nonprofit arts council, but it relies heavily on state funding

Brownback has argued that the arts will still flourish in Kansas with private funding and that the state must set priorities in using limited tax dollars in tough financial times.

"I'll be working to raise private moneys for the arts in this state," Brownback said.

He sought to replace the Kansas Arts Commission with a private nonprofit foundation, which formed in February. The governor used his power to individual budget items to strike $689,000 that legislators set aside for the Arts Commission in a $13.8 billion spending plan for the fiscal year that begins July 1.

Brownback also struck the line authorizing the commission's small staff. Even before he acted, his administration told the commission's five employees they'd be laid off June 10.

"The private sector - both nonprofit and for-profit - are providing all kinds of outlets for the arts," Cobb said. "Here's what's changed: People in the middle are saying, 'I'm not really sure this is a proper role of government."

Arts advocates have warned that eliminating the commission could cost the state as much as $1.2 million in federal funds. Brownback had proposed setting aside

Arts advocates argued that councils or dramatically cut fund- tions will likely lead to fewer performances, fewer art exhibits and fewer touring company visits to small towns.

"There is no comparable example of a state government walking away from supporting a public arts agency," said Katz, who served as the Kansas commission's executive director in the 1970s. "It's an extreme measure."

Officials at the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington weren't commenting Tuesday about Brownback's action or whether it will cost Kansas federal arts dollars.
