Colby holds tech conference

Even though its main audience is current teachers, many college students studying education also attend along with community members who wish to expand their education of technology.

The conference has a had a good turn out in the past. Last year, Colby and Salina had about 240 people. This year, Krannawitter said, coordinators expect at least 100 people at the Colby sessions and 100 people in Hutchinson.

"People love it." she said. "We get a lot of positive comments and feedback."

The organizers have worked hard to make sure attendees get the most out of the conference. They listen to feedback on past sessions and send out surveys on tools that teachers have integrated into their classroom. Throughout the year, planners "check-in"

on teachers for ideas on what they are going to do at the next conference.

This year, organizers plan to do a walk through of the classrooms in Buhler with students.

Some of the areas the conference will focus on are Web 2.0 and 21st century tools, project-based learning in the 21st century, strategies to maximize learning, new and effective ways to collaborate, free and easy educational software and learning networks. Participants can choose which sessions to go to.

Along with the learning experience, the conference has interactive sessions with new technology, interaction with fellow teachers and free technology resources. In addition, the conference offers graduate and undergraduate credits.

Kevin Honeycutt, a technology integration specialist at an educational service center in Hutchinson, will be the keynote speaker.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – As the Obama administration awaits the Pentagon's recommendation on troop cuts in Afghanistan, military leaders warned Thursday that the reduction must not jeopardize the progress made there in the past year.

The top commander in Afghanistan, Gen. David Petraeus, has not yet made his recommendation on the widely expected withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. But it will come in the next few weeks and move rapidly after that, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said Thursday.

Adm. Mike Mullen warned that while no one knows yet how deep the initial cut will be, it must not erode the progress that troops have made.

Some lawmakers have suggested that the killing of Osama bin Laden last month should result in a more rapid end to the U.S. involvement in the protracted

President Barack Obama has said that the drawdown of troops will begin in July. Obama is likely to announce his decision late this month about the size of that initial withdrawal. Military officials also expect a forecast for further withdrawals over the next

The No. 2 U.S. commander in Afghanistan said Thursday that over the coming months, Afghan forces must be pushed into the lead in more regions across the country.

"We have to start taking more risk and have more trust in them," Lt. Gen. David Rodriguez said, speaking to a conference at the Center for a New American Security.

He said he expects Afghan leaders to decide in August which additional regions in the country can be shifted from U.S. to Afghan military control.

There are roughly 100,000 U.S. troops in Afghani-
