Norton teacher honored

Nance Munderloh, director of adult basic education at Colby Community College, has been selected as Norton Correctional Facility Volunteer of the Year. She was recognized at the Kansas Department of Corrections Employee of the Year recognition luncheon May 27 in Topeka.

Munderloh and instructor Dian Organ established an adult education program at the Norton Correctional Facility in August 2009, focusing on successful re-entry after incarceration. Two courses are currently offered, Academic Improvement and the Work and Life Skills program. In addition, learners in both classes are able to prepare for the WorkKeys exam used in determining Kansas WORKReady! certification.

Munderloh and Organ teach four to five 10week sessions each year.

"We have had approximately 200 participants," said Munderloh. "About 40 learners have been awarded WORKReady! certificates. Platinum is the highest possible achievement. Two men have earned this level.'

Adult education classes are also offered on the Colby campus.

"The goal of the adult education program at Colby Community College is to assist learners in making measurable gains in acquiring the skills necessary for success in today's world," said Munderloh. "... Adult education services are available for anyone at least 16 years of age and not currently enrolled in school."

There is no charge for adult education classes. For information, contact Munderloh at 460-4663.

Foundation announces 2011 scholarship recipients

One hundred eighty-four scholarships were granted to 2011 high graduates by the Pete Henry Foundation established by a long-time

Brewster area farmer. Pete Henry was born in 1910 and raised on a farm near Campbell, Neb. After his mother's death when he was 13 he cared for four younger siblings while his father worked, quitting school after the eighth grade.

At 21, he went to California, where he signed on with the Civilian Conservation Corps, becoming head of a surveying crew which built roads and fire lanes in the Sierra Nevada Mountains. He then worked for a time for Douglas Aircraft.

During World War II he was a flight engineer in the Army and participated in top secret training.

In 1949 he rented ground south of Brewster from former Nebraska neighbors. Learning from successes and mistakes, investing in assets but living frugally, he provided most of the labor on the farm until he was 88 years old and continued making all management decisions until his death in 2002.

Henry's dreamed of helping local students further their education and established a foundation to award both academic and technical training scholarships.

Alternative planting of creek trees lowers cost

Forester Bill Beck can surprise landowners who worry that planting riparian trees alongside a creek, river or stream will be costly in terms of both cash

"I encourage them to consider direct seeding, rather than buying saplings to plant. I also recommend that – if possible – they use seed collected within 200 miles of their property. That ensures the parent tree is adapted to their property's climatic conditions," said Beck, a Kansas Forest Service watershed specialist.

By planting such species as black walnut, pecan and some oaks, landowners can look forward to future timber income, he said. Forested riparian strips also reduce runoff and erosion, stabilize banks during flooding, provide wildlife habitat, and keep streams cleaner and healthier for fish.

"If landowners have never done something like this before, they may want to contact their district ... forester before starting," Beck said. "They'll need mature tree seeds or nuts, and they'll need lots of them."

To break dormancy, most tree seeds require a period of stratification and/or extended low temperatures. For example, black walnuts must have 90 to 120 days at around 37 degrees.

Optimum seed number per acre depends on the site. But, direct seeding is high-density planting. In Kansas, it typically ranges from 1,500 to around 10,000 seeds an acre.

"The goal of direct seeding is to produce a thick 'dog hair' stand of young trees. The density helps with weed control. It promotes natural self-pruning by the trees – a real benefit when growing high-value timber," Beck said. "Site size often determines the best planting method. You can broadcast seeds across the soil, plant them in rows by hand, or use seed-planting machinery."

To increase the odds for a successful stand, he said, landowners should then follow this up by controlling seed predators and competing vegetation for about three years.

New course offered on solar energy

Colby Community College is offering an online class beginning Monday that will teach students to convert solar radiation into direct current electricity. All course work for the three credit-hour class will be offered online. Students will participate in a boot camp on campus for hands-on training on Saturday, July 16.

"Participants will learn about solar photovoltaic and how to convert solar radiation into direct current electricity," said instructor Derek Reilley. "Additional classes will be offered in fall 2011."

To enroll in the online Solar Photovoltaic Intermediate class, contact Reilley at (785) 460-5431 or email derek.reilley@colbycc.
