right owner to reduce their usage.

Every control area proposal has to be approved by Kansas Chief Engineer David Barfield. Local groups, such as groundwater management districts, can request them, but they still have to be approved by the chief engineer.

Bossert said no control areas have been approved in District Four's 10-county area, but there is one in Hays and one along the Smoky Hill River in Logan County. After District Four determined six areas of particularly bad decline in groundwater levels, it and landowners in Sheridan County began work on a control area proposal, but abandoned it in favor of local options that are easier to implement.

There have been about 12 approved across Kansas, Bossert said, and most, if not all, have been controversial. One idea is to change the way control area proposals work so that local entities have more control, he said, but the water congress may go the other way in favor of more state control.

Bossert said the congress will also be talking about conservation, and whether Kansas should implement a water conservation plan. The congress will put together a position on conservation so that it can lobby the Legislature next year's session.

The second meeting is Gov. Sam Brownback's economic summit from 9:30 a.m. to noon Thursday, July 21, in the Cultural Arts Center at the college. The governor has been holding economic summits around the state on issues like transportation, animal health and life sciences around the state, and Colby's meeting will concern water management of the Ogallala Aquifer. The aquifer reaches from South Dakota to Texas and includes northwest Kansas.

Bossert said the meeting is an opportunity for anyone interested in water rights, conservation and management to put in their two cents.

"My intention is to start a dialogue on IGUCAs there," he said. "What else comes up is anyone's guess."

Everything brought up at the meeting will be recorded by a new water committee - appointed by the Kansas Water Authority - who will put together a plan for the governor.

Bossert said the water authority as well as the Kansas Water Office and representatives from the department agriculture are likely to be at the meeting.

"I think you'll see all of the major water players at that meeting," he said.

Bossert said authority over water in Kansas isn't invested in any single entity. Decisions are never made quickly, he said, but that can be both good and bad.

From drought to deluge; Kansas sees extremes

By John Milburn

The Associated Press

FORT LEAVENWORTH -While extreme weather is a fact of life in Kansas, few years have provided such a contrast between too much and too little water.

Much of western Kansas from the Colorado border to the middle part of the state struggles through a prolonged drought that began more than a year ago. Fields planted with wheat are faltering as spotty rains have provided little to no moisture. Yields are likely to fall short of average.

In the eastern part of the state, communities are bracing for what forecasters are expecting to be historic levels along the Missouri River caused by heavy rains and snowmelt in Montana and the Dakotas. By next week, areas along the river could see a crest of 27 to 33 feet, well above flood stage.

"The whole central region of the country is unique that we are arid in the west and we have the humidity and precipitation in the east," said Tracy Streeter, director of the Kansas Water Office. "U.S. 81 seems to be that dividing line."

Weather patterns for the past year have made those extremes more pronounced. The National Weather Service says a La Nina over the Pacific Ocean has kept sas River have compounded manwestern Kansas drier than nor- agement ahead of the Missouri's mal, making the drought more rise. With flood gates closed, Streeter said the lakes will rise and cause localized flooding.

Communities along the Missouri have been forced to close their flood gates, too. Angee Morgan, deputy director of the Kansas Division of Emergency Management, said towns like Elwood could face flooding behind their levee if heavy rains fall and the water can't be channeled to the river, as designed.

On the other extreme, Gov. Sam Brownback is seeking federal disaster declaration for 46 counties affected by the drought. Conditions continue to deteriorate across the southern portion of Kansas.

Tracy Streeter, director of the Kansas Water Office, said while communities in the east are watching how much water comes down from the north, farmers out west are watching how much water they pull from below to sustain withering crops. Much of that region lacks the surface water to draw upon for irrigation and must take it from aquifers.

Streeter said recent rains in northeast Kansas along the Kan-River, a tributary of the Missouri. If the summer months are wet, However, as those spillways Coalition discusses disaster meetings

Evans said the architect for the trail will be here on Thursday, June 30 to discuss new features and to re-map the parking plan for the Aquatic Center. Evans said anyone with suggestions or ideas for the trail should contact her at the Northwest Kansas Regional Prevention Center.

"We are working to make Colby the most walkable town in Kansas," Evans said.

Evans' fellow coalition members agreed that the trail will be a great addition to the towns recreational options and it will help improve the overall community outlook and health.

The community garden and its progress was a popular topic. Members of the project team for the garden reported that all the plants are in the ground but volunteers are always needed to maintain the garden.

garden thrive and grow," said Orvella Romine, one of the garden's main organizers.

The garden's future plans are to provide fresh produce to a homeless shelter in Hays as well has get a sturdy list of volunteers to water and take care of the garden.

Dr. Amanda Griggs discussed her new Colby Running Club, which meets at 7:15 a.m. every Saturday in Fike Park. It is open for anyone who wants to train for a marathon or someone who just needs extra motivation to get into shape. Griggs said she hopes that the citizens of Thomas County take advantage of this opportunity to improve their health.

The next coalition meeting will be Thursday, July 14, at El Dos De Oros. Coalition members encourage anyone who has a passion to better Thomas County to come and get involved with one of the various project teams and groups.
