Kansas' historic preservation plan approved

The National Park Service has approved a statewide historic preservation plan, says the Kansas Historical Society. The plan was unveiled at the state preservation conference, June 1-3 in Topeka. Every five years the National Park Service requires state historic preservation offices to produce statewide plans to comply with the National Historic Preservation Act. The plan, which is intended to guide preservation efforts and decision making both locally and regionally, is the result of a two-year process to gather input from state and federal agencies, preservation organizations and the public. The document identifies the network of organizations that contribute to the interpretation and preservation of Kansas' cultural and natural resources. The plan identifies a series of goals that can be addressed by state and federal agencies, local governments, preservation organizations, property owners, and interested members of the public within the next five years. The goals are to broaden public knowledge about historic preservation resources, programs, and issues; strengthen advocacy for preservation; develop a statewide preservation network; integrate historic preservation practices into community planning; and fund historic preservation initiatives. The plan is available to the public at kshs.org/17132.

Bun beating in Salina jail

SALINA (AP) – A purloined pastry has led to new charges against seven inmates at a central Kansas jail. The Salina Journal reports that a 23-year-old inmate at the Salina County Jail allegedly took a honey bun belonging to another inmate sometime Saturday. Late Saturday night, the suspected pastry thief was jumped by seven fellow inmates and beaten with a sock filled with dominoes. The sheriff's office says the beaten man was treated at the jail for a possible rib injury. Six of the other inmates have been charged with battery, and the seventh with aggravated battery.
