Freedom is for serving others

Freedom. An important word for this weekend as we celebrate the Fourth of July, the celebration of the day in 1776 when our colonial leaders proclaimed our independence from England.

Freedom was important then, and freedom remains important to us today. We go to court to protect it and to the halls of government to legislate it. We go to war to defend it and to therapy to experience it.

But we also have some ambivalence about freedom. We cherish it but worry when some individual or group might have too much. Some see moral values and codes of conduct eroding away because of what we perceive to be too much latitude in the giving of freedom. Others protest that our freedom as citizens is being taken away by more restrictive laws and encroachment on our privacy by big business and big government.

These are all political questions that we ask about and debate, but have you ever asked what freedom means to us as Christians?

For the apostle Paul the answer was simple. Freedom is obedience to God, not to our own desires. In Galatians 5:1 Paul says, "For freedom Christ has set us free." Then he goes further in verses 13 and 14, saying, "For you were called to freedom, brothers and sisters; only do not use your freedom as an opportunity for self-indulgence, but through love become slaves to one another. For the whole law is summed up in one commandment, 'you shall love your neighbor as yourself" (NRSV).

being enslaved to sin (Romans 6:6). But then he goes on in verse 14 to say that sin will not have dominion over anyone under the law of grace that we have in Jesus Christ. He adds that through our freedom in Christ we are now slaves to righteousness (v. 18). In other words we are now enslaved to a restored relationship with God so that we can live a life of service to others - and to God. Then in verse 23 Paul concludes that our ultimate freedom is the free gift of eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The kind of freedom Paul is talking about liberates us from sin's captivity for lives of generous, loving service. We are freed from self-centeredness and called to lives beyond ourselves and our own little world. German theologian Dietrich Bonhoeffer was hanged by the Nazis in 1945 for his work in the German resistance. In his writings he said, "Freedom is not something we have for self, but for others. Freedom is not a presence, a possession, an object; it is a relationship, and nothing else" ("Creation and Fall," p. 37).

Paul attests to a freedom that seems to be the antithesis of what contemporary society rian Church in Colby. She may be reached at In his letter to the Romans Paul talks about defines freedom. The contemporary belief re- 462-6342.

flects a freedom that implies no obligations and no commitments - the freedom to do whatever you please apart from any laws or restrictions. The contemporary understanding of freedom misleads us into believing that, if you are lucky or strong or bold or beautiful and powerful enough, you can live absent any obligations, any commitments, any requirements whatsoever.

But Paul promises that God has granted to us the freedom in Christ to strive for things that bring long term happiness and eternal blessings. Paul believes that God has granted us the power to aspire to and achieve more than our surroundings or culture offers. Our true freedom as Christians comes form our relationship with Christ. This is not a freedom that is earned, is not a reward for faithful living or good behavior. This freedom comes to us as a freely given gift, and when we are relationship with Christ, it becomes our way of life.

We know freedom comes at a high price. The colonial leaders who declared our independence knew that. We know that today. And this is true for Christians as well. Our freedom in Christ is costly. It calls us to lay down our lives, pick up our cross and follow him in service to the Good News we have in Jesus Christ and in service to our neighbors. May you know this truest of all freedoms this Fourth of July and every day after.
