Deaths

Georgia M. Patton

Junction, Colo., formerly of Colby and sister of Billie White of Colby, died Monday, Aug. 1, 2011, at her home

She was born March 3, 1939, in Lenora, the oldest of nine children to George and Wanda (Boeugher) Scott. In 1957, she graduated from Lenora High School.

In 1960, she married Royce Jackson of Hill City. They had four children in their 18 years of marriage. She later married Ken Patton of McCook, Neb., and were together for 30 years. Most of those years were spent together in Colby, but they later moved to Grand Junction.

She worked as a restaurant hostess, certified nursing assistant, newspaper advertising, baker and bookkeeper but in between enjoyed being a homemaker.

I try to swim four mornings a week and much of my swim time is also my prayer time.

A few days ago, as I stepped into the pool and began to think about those for whom I would be praying for that day a prayer came into my head that I had not thought about in years, maybe decades.

It was a prayer from my growing up years, but not one my parents taught me to say before a meal or when I went to bed, not one I had learned in Sunday school or Vacation Bible School, but one from my years as a Girl Scout. At the end of every meeting we would cross our arms, always right over left, hold the hands of the girls next to us in the circle and sing Taps. And then we would pray.

Today some might object to this final prayer, saying it was an infringement on their right not be today, Friday, Aug. 5, 2011, to pray or an affront to their spiritual sensibiliat New Elmwood Cemetery in ties, but back in the olden days of my childhood we all went to church.

There were three churches in Irvington, to Alpine Hospice, 2764 Compass N.Y., so most families went to the Roman Dr. Unit 112b, Grand Junction, Catholic, Episcopal or Presbyterian churches A woman of many talents and Colo., 81506 or AGAPE Care, and the Jewish families went to the synagogue in the village just north of us. That's just how it was, and the idea of Girl Scouts praying at can't pray in school anymore. Personally, I the end of their meeting didn't seem to bother anyone.

It was a simple prayer taken from scripture – Genesis 31:49. Laban is saying farewell to his son-in-law Jacob and to his two daughters, Leah and Rebekah, now Jacob's wives. As they depart Laban offers this blessing. "May the Lord watch between me and thee, while watchful eye.

we are absent, one from another." That was what we Girl Scouts prayed with and for one another every Wednesday afternoon. And that was the prayer I thought of as I began to think of all the folks I knew who needed prayers that morning. I prayed a prayer of God's watchfulness and of seeing one another again.

Prayers don't need to be long or full of big and pretentious words that only God can understand. They don't have to have flowery language or be organized in just a certain way. Prayers can be short, simple, and from the heart. Sixteen words can say an awful lot; they can be a meaningful blessing. Spoken aloud or silently, this prayer can be a powerful bless-

I hear people complaining that children don't think public schools should be in the prayer business anyway, but if you want your children to pray in the morning gather the family together before everyone goes their separate ways and pray this simple prayer together. What a wonderful way to begin the day rian Church in Colby. She may be reached at – praying that all will be under God's care and

When someone is heading off somewhere, be it for a great vacation or for medical treatment or surgery in Hays or Denver, offer to pray this prayer with them. Give them the blessing of God's abiding presence.

If you are too bashful to pray aloud, pray silently. God will hear it either way. Whenever there might be a time a leaving or separation, for a long time or just for a quick time apart, this prayer offers the desire for God's protection and for return and reunion.

At the time of death these simple words speak of longing and love, and also proclaim resurrection hope and the promise of someday being together again. This is a prayerful way of affirming that there is nothing in this world or the next that can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus. Even in absence God is still present with us, watching us, caring for us, loving us and holding us together.

I learned quite a bit in Girl Scouts - camping and first aid skills, watching clouds and forecasting the weather, how to sew, even how to darn a sock. But perhaps the most enduring legacy from that time is that simple prayer we said every Wednesday afternoon as we parted company - until we saw each other the next day in school.

May the Lord watch between me and thee, while we are absent, one from another. Amen.

China exhibits to be in Denver

Art Museum will get a rare look inside China's artistic history through two special exhibitions. "Xu Beihong: Pioneer of Modern Chinese Painting" and "Threads of Heaven: Silken Legacy of China's Last Dynasty" explore this mysterious and ceremonial country during two time periods – the latter years of the Qing Dynasty (1644–1912), and the subsequent formation of the Republic of Chiin place for four to six weeks. na during the early to middle 20th century.

Xu Beihong offers a once-in-alifetime opportunity to see the full spectrum of work by the 20th century Chinese artist who is widely recognized as the father of modern Chinese painting. One of the first Chinese artists to study in Europe, Xu revolutionized painting in China by drawing influence from both the East and West. This exhi-

This fall, visitors to the Denver bition will feature approximately 60 works from the Xu Beihong Memorial Museum, the majority of which have never before been on view in the United States.

Threads of Heaven illustrates the court and culture of the Qing Dynasty and the final days of empire in China through more than 100 dazzling pieces ranging from court robes to intricately embroidered accessories to pictorial hangings. The Denver Art Museum is the only venue for both exhibitions, on view Sunday, Oct. 30, through Jan. 29.

A broad range of China-related programs will accompany the exhibitions throughout the fall and winter, including special member moments, family activities, a symposium, adult lectures on Chinese art and culture and a Chinesethemed final Friday event.

The museum is a private, non-profit, organization on 13th Avenue between Broadway and Bannock Streets in downtown Denver. General admission is free on the first Saturday of each month.

Bindweed takes battle Field bindweed is adept at said. The steps are to 1) till and blending in, while it takes over other plants. Homeowners may not notice the noxious weed until small pink-to-white, trumpetshaped flowers show up in shrubs

Unfortunately, once a bindweed vine produces more than six shield-shaped leaves, it becomes increasingly difficult to control. Typically, homeowners must take a multi-pronged approach for several years – or more, said Ward Upham, K-State Research and Extension horticulturist.

"You can't afford to ignore it. At least pull it up every time you see it," Upham advised. "Under ideal conditions, bindweed can grow roots that reach 30 feet in every direction and have growth buds that spread things even further. Its flowers produce about 550 longlasting seeds every year, and they get around – via birds or any kind

Another approach is to apply glyphosate (Roundup, many others) when bindweed is at or beyond full bloom and growing well – even into fall, he said. Glyphosate will kill any greenery it hits. So, gardeners must kill everything in a particular plot and/ or protect nearby ornamentals and turfgrass by either using a cardboard shield or spraying down a cardboard tube.

A selective lawn herbicide that impacts bindweed is now available to homeowners, Upham added. Quinclorac sells under the trade name Drive. It's also one in-
