Check heat ventilation

Guard against carbon monoxide poisoning by inspecting heat sources and ensuring proper ven-

"Carbon monoxide is an odorless, colorless gas that is toxic and results from the incomplete combination of oxygen and carbon during combustion," said Mary Knapp, state climatologist with K-State Research and Extension. She said common sources include unvented gas or kerosene space heaters, leaking furnaces or fireplaces, back drafts from gas water heaters or gas stoves, generators and exhaust from car engines.

Keeping the car out of the garage or enclosed areas with poor ventilated areas when it is running will reduce carbon monoxide pro-"It is a good idea to make certain that your furnace is in good operating condition and that the chimney is clear and in good shape before lighting that first fire of the season," Knapp said. You can also buy carbon monoxide detectors for your home, though you should not depend on these in place of routine inspections and maintenance on your
