Deaths mount in Illinois storms today Weather

The tornadoes were spawned by a powerful storm system that blew down from the Rockies on Tuesday and was headed across the Ohio and Tennessee river valleys toward the Mid-Atlantic region.

Corey Mead, lead forecaster at the U.S. Storm Prediction Center in Norman, Okla., said a broad cold front was slamming into warm, humid air over much of the eastern half of the nation.

From Tuesday night into Wednesday morning, at least 16 tornado sightings were reported from Nebraska and Kansas across southern Missouri to Illinois and Kentucky, according to the storm center, an arm of the National Weather Service.

Jennifer Verhaalen, a long-term resident at the Hillbilly Inn Motel in downtown Branson, said she saw a white funnel cloud followed by a wall of rain as the storm closed but it isn't unusual to see severe storms earin on the town around 1 a.m.

Across the road, a strip mall lay in tatters, its roof missing and several walls collapsed. As the sun rose Wednesday, business owners picked through the remains of their stores.

Keith and Glenna Bartley, tourists from Kingsport, Tenn., said staff at the Grand Victorian Hotel where they were staying ushered them to the basement around 1:30 a.m.

Farther north, rescue crews waited for sunrise to begin searching a trailer park south of Buffalo where at least one person was killed after an apparent twister slammed the area.

Lt. Dana Eagan of the Dallas County Sheriff's Office said 13 people at the park were hurt and the entire town was without power. Buffalo is about 35 miles north of Springfield.

Tornado season normally starts in March, lier in the year. Forecasters can seldom assess how serious a season will be because twisters are so unpredictable. This year, two people were killed by separate tornadoes in Alabama in January, and preliminary reports show 95 tornadoes that month.

The system also skirted northern Arkansas, bringing gusts of up to 60 mph in the northwest. A wall cloud, which often produces twisters, was reported in Cherokee Village, where trees were scattered along roads, the weather service said. Residents of Clay County in northeastern Arkansas reported hail the size of golf balls, while half dollar-sized hail was reported in Mountain Home.

In northern Oklahoma, gusts of up to 80 mph flipped trailers and damaged homes near Cherokee.

The wind, from a storm system that moved through the state, the blew between 50 and 55 mph throughout Scholl, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service in Goodland. The highest report was 61 mph 10 miles southsoutheast of Sharon Springs. Scholl said the weather of-lower visibility and blowing dust, but no wind damage reports in western Kansas.

Strong winds whipped age, along with a possible western Kansas tornado, in Cloud County. An Tuesday, stirring up dust and apparent twister wrecked the small town of Harveyville in Waubunsee County.

The wind was still affecting the area today, with Thomas, Rawlins, Sheridan, Logan, western Kansas, said Blair Gove, Decatur, Graham and Hitchcock, Neb., counties under a red flag warning for critical fire danger – until 6 p.m. The biggest threat is until late afternoon, but after that time, the gusty west-tofice received a few reports of northwest wind was expected to decrease dramatically.

The church's pastor, Dennis Irwin, described his church as vibrant and said it has 111 members.

"We'll rebuild," he said. "It's too much part of the community not to rebuild."

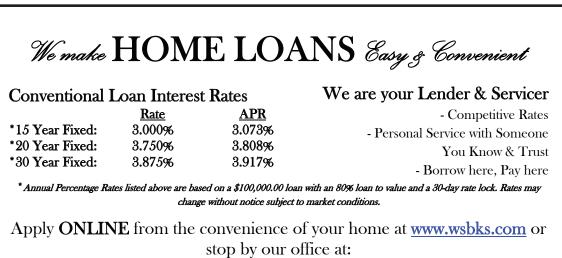

Tammy Woodyard, 39, was surveying the wreckage of her father's home, where only parts were still standing. The roof had been ripped off, some of the walls had collapsed and the living room was visible from the outside.

Woodvard said her father. who was heading into his basement when the storm hit, was uninjured. About a block away, her home sustained roof damage when a tree fell on it.
