nal in North Carolina and the Morning News of Florence, S.C., among others.

Berkshire Hathaway has owned the Buffalo News of New York for decades and bought its hometown paper, the Omaha World-Herald, in December. The company is also the largest shareholder of the Washington Post Co., with a 23 percent stake.

Buffett has defended newspapers, saying that they will have a decent future if they continue delivering information that can't be found elsewhere. They need to stop offering news free online, he has said.

"In towns and cities where there is a strong sense of community, there is no more important institution than the local paper," Buffett said in a statement today. "The many locales served by the newspapers we are acquiring fall firmly in this mold and we are delighted they have found a per- charitable foundation.

manent home with Berkshire Hathaway." That's a reversal of his opinion in 2009, when he told Berkshire shareholders that most newspapers faced the possibility of unending losses because the industry had lost its essential nature.

"For most newspapers in the United States, we would not buy them at any price," he said then.

Berkshire is also lending $445 million to Media General, which it will use to pay off debt. In return, Berkshire is getting the 19.9 percent stake in Media General and a seat on the board.

Shares of Media General, which is based in Richmond, Va., jumped $1.29, or 41 percent, to $4.43 in late morning trading. The stock has ranged from $1.14 to $6.84 over the past year. Berkshire's Class B shares added 13 cents to $80.72
