want to show an ID.

"It's sad, really," she said. "We have fought for our right to vote, especially women, and some people are willing to show their ID to buy liquor or cigarettes and to write a check at Walmart, but won't do it to vote."

The county had 36 provisional ballots submitted at the polls, and of those, three were rejected. Two were denied because the voter did not provide photo identification and they did not present their ID to the clerk's office later.

The third was from an unaffiliated voter who requested a Democratic ballot. After being entered into the voting system, the voter then decided she wanted to vote Republican instead.

The remaining provisional votes which were accepted came from voters who had a change of address, became a registered voter at the poll, had a name change and from people who did not have their photo ID with them at the time of voting, but produced it at the clerk's office later.

'There were no Mickey Mouse write-ins this year," said Harms, "but we did have a few write-ins for Anybody Else, DK and somebody by the name of A."

energizing his party's conservative base.

Now Romney, straying from his campaign's efforts to stay singularly focused on jobs and the economy, is targeting Obama's greatest strength - his likeability.

Every major poll in the past two months has found Obama's favorability rating in positive territory, while Romney's languishes at about even or worse and has deteriorated in some recent surveys.

Some of Romney's efforts to chip away at Obama's likeability have focused on negative ads run by the president's campaign and a super political action committee supporting him. Priorities USA Action ran a commercial suggesting Romney was personally responsible for the death from cancer of the wife of a man who worked at a steel plant that was bought and subsequently capital firm, Bain Capital.

publican vice presidential candidate's Medicare overhaul. The developing Obama strategy comes as Romney and Ryan make clear they plan to campaign aggressively on Medicare, not run away from it. In person and in a television ad, the Republicans argued Tuesday that Obama is the one who cut spending for Medicare to put money toward his divisive health care overhaul.

In states with large military and veteran populations - Florida, Ohio and Virginia among them – the Obama campaign plans to attack Ryan's proposed cuts for veterans' benefits and care, a campaign official said. The official was not authorized to discuss the campaign strategy publicly and requested anonymity.

In Colorado, Ohio and Iowa, the campaign sees opportunities to capitalize on Ryan's proposed cuts to clean energy industries that are taking hold in those trumps Romney's ground game of Ryan's budget, expanding states. The Obama team will in some states.

ments would essentially cede new energy technologies - and the jobs that could come with them - to countries like China, the official said.

In Nevada and several other states, the campaign plans to push the impact of Ryan's budget on education, citing estimates that it would cut 200,000 children a year from Head Start, an early education program, and reduce Pell grants for 10 million college students.

The campaign launched an ad Tuesday in five states - Colorado, Iowa, Nevada, Ohio and Virginia - that links Romney directly to the Ryan budget's impact on college grants.

Obama's team may launch other paid advertising on elements of Ryan's budget soon. But for now, the campaign is focused on getting its message out in local media and directly to voters through its ample grass-roots network, which still of lemonade - April's lemonade stand is no joke. This year, Tammy said, April sold 10 gallons of lemonade. The money is still being counted, but it will probably add up to more then last year, when April made between $500 and $600, enough to feed as many as 40 dogs at the shelter through the winter. The year before that, they made it from one visitor. Another woman dropped $300 to $400, not as much, but enough for a check into the box without taking anything new wading pools for the dogs.

"They actually named April an honorary board member," Tammy said. "They were pretty excited about what she was doing."

It was not hard to see how they raised so much money, considering people's generosity. The girls said their box had 20 dollars in Tammy was glad that someone was helping the shelter.

"I don't think most people know there's a shelter over there," she said.
