spondence of these men, describing in detail each walked or drove their vintage cars on the streets challenge, failure and triumph. The methods these of town including Todd and Melissa Stramel and men pioneered restored the land and reclaimed the High Plains as the Bread Basket of the world.

"I am very excited to see the finished product," said Assistant Fire Chief Sean Hankin, who portrays the image of John Kriss, one of the two main characters in the film. "The documentary isn't just a period piece, it is what people lived through back then. It is very much their life.

"There are a lot of aspects of the film that are very exciting, since it will get national recognition and may even be utilized in the school systems as a learning device for Kansas history. People I've talked to have been thrilled and I'm looking forward to seeing it, too."

Narrated by Mike Rowe, creator and host of the Discovery Channel's Dirty Jobs, and inspired by the work on western Kansas by noted Kansas historian Craig Miner, the film has made extensive use of historic films from the period by Director Jay Kriss.

It recreates the "Dirty 30s" in Colby and the actual farming methods and equipment used during the time.

"This story brings to life the human challenges we all face," said producer Sydney Duvall. "Though the time may be different, the obstacles remain today. These men showed that through perseverance one could overcome the odds."

The streets of Colby on Franklin Avenue, the Thomas County Courthouse and the old Cooper elevator and scale house near Fike Park can be seen in the movie as well as other property around the county and the people here.

In addition to Hankin being in the movie, many residents here wore period clothing as extras who their children, Larry and Taylor McLemore, Jim McLaughlin, Jeremy and Michelle Quint, Shawn Stephens, Sacha Sanguinetti, Wayne Horlacher and Colby Mayor Gary Adrian.

"The film reflects how tough life was in the 1930's and 40's," said Adrian. "People had to dig deep in order to survive, not just here, which is where the movie is featured, but throughout all of Kansas.

"It was so neat to be apart of this experience and I'm glad that Colby was able to share in this opportunity to showcase our own history."

"I'm proud that we were able to come together as a community to help create such a historicallyaccurate documentation of this magnitude," said Chamber Director Holly Whitaker. "From the high schoolers who helped hold cameras, to the college donating time-period clothing and the people who shared their vintage cars and property for the film.

"There were so many people who were involved and it showcases the incredible people who lived here in the 30's and the community-minded people who are still here today."

Smoky Hills Public Television has joined with Inspirit Creative, based in Williamsburg, Va., to bring "Harvesting the High Plains." The Bruce Cochener Foundation and the Kansas Humanities Council provided major funding for the film.

For information, go to www.harvestingthehighplains.org or www.smokyhillstv.org.

The video will be broadcast on Smoky Hills Public Television at 7 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 15.
