

Aerosol sniffer hits restaurant

PIKEVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Authorities in Pike County have charged a woman whose car plowed into a Subway restaurant, slightly injuring two employees. Police said 55-year-old Toma Williamson told officers she was inhaling an aerosol computer keyboard cleaner as she drove down U.S. 23. Restaurant employee Stacia Newsome told WYMT-TV (bit.ly/UzeFOp) in Hazard Williamson's car veered off the road and drove into the restaurant. "It was just a tragic scene. I have never ever in my life seen something like this," said Newsome. Police charged Williamson with driving under the influence, failure to wear a seatbelt, having no operator's license and having no insurance. "Folks do this and it actually causes them to receive a high, and the high is similar to an alcohol high," said Commercial Vehicle Enforcement Officer Thomas Gearheart. Williamson and two store employees were treated for minor injuries. The owner of the building said it could take a month to make repairs so the Subway could reopen, leaving employees to wonder how they'll manage through the holidays.
