Housing shortage eased with grant

because the grant was for cities or counties with 60,000 or fewer people. The money was turned over to the nonprofit, which has the resources to work on the project.

"The more people that are involved in it, the more likely you are to have (the grant) approved," Rocca said.

J.R. Behan, director of operations for the state agency, said in October that the housing is to be geared towards people in a moderate income bracket, which for a family of four would mean a yearly income between $32,640 and $81,600. He said other winners were Norton, Dodge City, Garden City, Larned, Pittsburg, Montgomery County and Osage County.

Schamberger said she was excited to get the federal grant as she looked up how many of them had been awarded.

"It's such an honor, I mean, there's so few of these things going out," she said. "It's a big plus for northwest Kansas."

In all, 12 rural development grants had been awarded in the U.S., including one in Puerto Rico. The Rexford grant was the only one in Kansas.

Northwest Kansas Housing develops and rehabilitates housing for cities and counties in this part of the state.

"Cities ask and that's where we try to target things is whoever comes to us and ask for help," Chamberger said, adding that it is common for someone to donate land for projects.

The nonprofit one of three organizations in the Northwest Kansas Planning and Development Commission, the commission's website says. Helping to prepare and administer the grants is the commission itself, while Pioneer Country Development Inc. covers the business and financial side of the projects.

The commission works in Thomas, Cheyenne, Decatur, Ellis, Gove Graham, Logan, Norton, Osborne, Phillips, Rawlins, Rooks, Russell, Sheridan, Sherman, Smith and Wallace counties.

After the first grant was awarded, Behan described the project as "a unique opportunity for us to be able to do something in a really small town," because most of this agency's other projects focused on low-income housing and large apartment buildings.

Cold front will move into area Friday

a.m. (Central Time) and will continue to be strong until a cold front shifts the wind to the north in late afternoon. A few areas of blowing dust are possible, especially in areas that have missed recent snowfalls.

Lundquist said Colby's predicted high for Friday is 51, but there might be a chance for precipitation Friday night.

"I'm not too optimistic for the Colby area," he added.

He said the cold front will move into the area Friday afternoon into evening, and once the front moves through, the moisture will taper off.

Precipitation will be just behind the front, Lundquist said, and the air will cool below the freezing point, so what does develop will turn into snow. Colby has a 20 percent chance, at best, during the early evening, he said.

"We don't have quite the same environment as we have today and last night," Lundquist said. "Behind the front, it's fairly cold, and we won't have a warmer layer of air, so what should remain is snow."

Appeals judges seem wary of release of bin Laden photos

By Frederic J. Frommer
 The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal appeals court judges seemed skeptical today about forcing the government to release photos and video taken of Osama bin Laden during and after a raid in which the terrorist leader was killed by U.S. commandos. Judicial Watch, a conservative watchdog group, is seeking the images through the Freedom of Information Act. The Defense Department said it didn't turn up anything responsive to the FOIA, while the CIA found 52 responsive records. The intelligence agency withheld all of them, citing exemptions for classified materials and information specifically exempted by other laws.

Judicial Watch lawyer Michael Bekesha told the appeals court panel in arguments today that the government didn't provide a specific enough basis for denying the request. But Judge

Merrick Garland said the government cited specific concerns that the images could be used by the al-Qaida terrorist network for propaganda and to incite anti-American sentiment.

Bekesha said that the government didn't provide the justification for each of the 52 records, and how each one of them would cause harm.

He suggested that graphic photos of bin Laden's corpse should be distinguished from somber images of bin Laden's burial at sea, for example.

Judith W. Rogers, a Clinton appointee, said this wasn't a typical case, because bin Laden was the al-Qaida founder.
