• Heard Athletic Director Larry Gabel report the wrestling team took second at the state tournament, and Colby's Matt Sims had been selected as the Class 4A coach of the year.

Fifty-five students are out for track this spring, 31 for softball, 24 for baseball, 18 for golf and 10 for tennis, Gabel said.

He said that Matt and Stella Ziegelmeier plan give the school a $2,500 award that they got from Monsanto.

· Heard from Lance Krannawitter, grade school principal, that several children's authors gave presentations to students. Julia Cook talked to all grade-school students about bullying on March 4 and then spoke to parents later that evening. On March 6, children's author Dale-Marie Bryan, Farlington, who used to live between McCook and Oberlin, worked with the fifth graders on their writing and editing.

A drama group from York College in Nebraska was to perform at the school auditorium today. Krannawitter said Shelby Terrell, daughter of first-grade teacher Krysti Terrell, plays the lead.

He also reported that the district is getting ready for after-school programs and would have an enrollment meeting Tuesday evening in the grade school gym.

On April 3, an honors scholars program organized by the University of Kansas at the Elks Lodge in Goodland will honor top area seniors.

• Heard Curriculum Director Diana Wieland report that a coordinating council meeting Wednesday would focus on accreditation standards. The school will have an audit of some of its online programs, she said. Wieland said she will continue to work on a grant for after-school activities for middle-school students, but that money could be held back by federal budget cuts.

• Heard Harrison report that several bills could be discussed in the state Legislature later in the week. These mainly cover funding and organization within the school system at the state level.

"I'm anxiously awaiting to hear what's going to happen with the budget," Harrison added.

She said there will be meetings with the crisis council Monday and Tuesday, April 1, and that the negotiation committee, which includes board members Omar Weber and Ed Geihsler, will meet with the Kansas-National Education Association on Tuesday.

• Decided to seek bids for a new activity bus. Harrison said the bus, part of the capital outlay plan, will be the second one the district buys this vear.

· Agreed to a renewal of an interlocal agree- Heard from middle school Principal Robb ment with the Northwest Kansas Educational Service Center.

Senate Dems on track to pass budget

By Andrew Taylor

Senate moved on today toward approving their first budget in four years, promising another, almost $1 trillion round of tax increases on top of more than $600 billion in higher taxes on the wealthy enacted in January.

The nonbinding but politically symbolic measure would protect safety-net programs for the poor and popular domestic priorities like education, health research and federal law enforcement agencies from cuts sought by House Republicans, who adopted a far more austere plan on Thursday.

The Democratic plan caters to party stalwarts on the liberal edge of the spectrum just as the House GOP measure was crafted to appeal to more recent tea party arrivals.

The $1 trillion in new revenue would accrue over the coming decade and would be coupled with a net $875 billion in spending cuts, generated by modest cuts to federal health care programs, domestic agencies and the Pentagon and reduced government borrowing costs.

Paul Ryan, R-Wis., demonstrates that it's possible, at least mathematically, to balance the budget within a decade without raising taxes. But to do so, Ryan, his party's vice presidential nominee last year, assumes deep cuts that would force millions from programs for the poor like food stamps and Medicaid and cut almost 20 percent from domestic agency budget levels assumed less than two years ago.

Ryan's plan passed the House on a mostly partyline, 221-207 vote, with 10 Republicans joining Democrats against it.

Senators braced for dozens of votes during a cuts, known as sequestration.

marathon session expected today, with pessimists The Associated Press in the Capitol predicting a final vote on the Demo-WASHINGTON - Democrats controlling the cratic plan in the pre-dawn hours of Saturday. In early voting this morning, Democrats rejected yet another attempt to repeal Obama's landmark health care law by a strictly party-line vote.

That tall stack of votes follows up a quintet of politically freighted Senate tallies Thursday night, including a move by Democrats to force a vote on the controversial Ryan budget, which was rejected by a 59-40 vote, with five Republicans joining every Democrat in opposition.

Republicans countered with a move by Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., putting Democrats on record in opposition to balancing the budget by the end of the decade. It failed on a near party-line vote.

The dueling House and Senate budget plans are anchored on opposite ends of the ideological spectrum in Washington, appealing to core partisans in warring GOP and Democratic tribes long gridlocked over how to attack budget deficits. The GOP plan caters to tea party forces, while Senate Budget Committee Chairman Patty Murray, D-Wash., crafted a measure designed to nail down The GOP budget proposal, similar to previous support from liberal senators like Bernie Sanders, plans offered by Budget Committee Chairman I-Vt., and Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, who vehemently oppose cuts to safety net programs.

> What the Ryan and Murray budgets both fail to do is reach out to the political middle, where any possible bargain would have to be forged. President Barack Obama has been reaching out to lawmakers in hopes of sparking a budget compromise that has proved so elusive.

> But Murray's plan would actually increase government spending - on top of a baseline that already assumes automatic budget increases averaging more than 5 percent a year – after accounting for the $1.2 trillion cost of repealing the automatic
