file for one of three open seats on the Gem City Council, was elected with 18 votes. Luke Juenemann, with 12 write-in votes, and Monica Miller, with 6, got the other two seats.

Parker Christensen was the only candidate to file for the council in Rexford, which had two open seats. The other will go to Betty J. Nickols a write in; she tied Christensen with 29 votes.

In Brewster, Heather Alwin and Dwayne Randolph, the only two people to file, each took a council seat with the same number of votes as counted Tuesday. The third open seat went to Shane Benham, who got 7 seven write-in votes. Alwin is the society reporter for the Colby Free Press.

City Superintendent Mike Schultz said he thought fewer people voted in Brewster because they had to drive to Colby or Goodland to vote, depending on where they live.

If a poll was taken, he said, "I'd guarantee you 98 percent of the people would rather have the place to vote to be in Brewster."

For the Colby School Board, incumbents Tracy Rogers and Janice Frahm and newcomer Kristina Lemman took the three open seats, each getting slightly more votes after the canvass than they did on Wednesday. The other two candidates were Ronda Faber, wife of Joshua Faber, and Chad Applebury.

Incumbents Kenton Krehbiel and Bill Shields and newcomer Audrey Hines took the three open seats on the college board; they were the only candidates running.

Not enough people had filed to fill the open seats on the Oakley and Triplains school boards, but people have been found for those jobs.

Incumbents Mark Hanson and Shawn Plummer were the only candidates who filed for the four seats on the Triplains board, with Hanson getting 80 votes and Plummer 79. Molly Lamb and Dathan Nichols, the other two board members whose terms expire this year, did not file to run again, but they got 50 and 32 write-in votes, respectively.

Lamb said she would stay on the board, and though Nichols could not be reached, his wife Sarena said he would do the same thing.

In Oakley, incumbents Anita Gabel and Debbie Runnalls were the only candidates to file, but Jay Sporer got seven write-in votes. Three seats were left open when board member Scott Maurath did not file to run again.

After the filing deadline passed, the superintendents for both school boards said the boards could appoint the write-in candidates with the most votes. If no write-in agreed to run, by July 1, any open seat would be advertised in the newspaper.

Three seats were open on the Grinnell and Brewster school boards. Ed Ackerman, Stuart Schmidt and Nicolas Schroeder took the Brewster seats in an uncontested race. Brian Beckman, Duane Vollbracht and Loren Stephens took the seats in the Grinnell School District, which includes voters from Thomas, Sheridan and Gove counties.

Matt Cheney, Chad Focke, Sandra Lobato and Jason Rogers won four open seats on the Golden Plains School Board, which covers parts of Rawlins, Sheridan, Decatur and Thomas counties. Cheney, Focke, Lobato and Todd Schwarz had been in the lead Tuesday in Thomas. The district did not yet have the vote totals.

- Approved Rothchild's plan to request a bioterrorism grant for a 800 MHz radio so the department can communicate with law enforcement personnel and others during disasters.
- Removed a portion of the county transportation driver's job description requiring him or her to perform minor maintenance activities at county buildings. Jim Harms, the driver, said he would still be able to perform minor maintenance such as changing light bulbs and shoveling sidewalks, but could not become involved in larger tasks such as plumbing replacement since he might get called to transport someone while in the middle of a task.

- Received reports from the road and bridge, noxious weed control and landfill departments. This year, Supervisor Larry Jumper reported, the landfill has received 1,356 tons of waste. The landfill must keep its levels below 20 tons per day to maintain its qualification as a small landfill. Commissioner Paul Steele said this threshold is "one of the reasons to stress recycling in Thomas County."
- Approved the payment of accounts in the amount of $49,169.34.
- Approved tax roll corrections. Abate-ments totaled $394.20 from three transactions and additions totaled $1413.14 from Bruce Baird as personal property tax. Douglas R. Ketchum received an abatement for $121.24. Chann Fromholtz received an abatement for $49.68. Northwest Ventures LLC received an abatement for $223.28.

- Acting as the Board of Canvassers, officially approved the election results from last Tuesday with no changes from the preliminary results.

The board chose to count the one provisional ballot, which could not be approved on election day because the voter's name had changed due to marriage.

Briefly
