The girls track team was first and the boys sixth in a league track meet, and there will be state championships for track, baseball and softball next week.

Colby was second in the overall Great Western Activities Conference league standings this year, he said. The high school is in need of a head coach for girls' and boys' basketball.

Gabel said later the baseball team lost 4-9 to Goodland that night and the softball team beat Ulysses 11-0. The girls were to play Goodland at Ulysses this afternoon and could go onto the finals tonight.

Justice investigates IRS targeting

By Stephen Ohlemacher Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The Justice Department is opening a criminal investigation of the Internal Revenue Service just as another probe concludes that lax management enabled agents to improperly target tea party groups for extra scrutiny when they applied for tax exempt status.

Attorney General Eric Holder said he ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation to investigate Friday – the day the IRS publicly acknowledged that it had singled out conservative groups.

"Those (actions) were, I think, as everyone can agree, if not criminal, they were certainly outrageous and unacceptable," Holder said. "But we are examining the facts to see if there were criminal violations.'

Holder was scheduled to testify today before the House Judiciary Committee.

House Speaker John Boehner told reporters Wednesday, "My question is, who's going to jail over this scandal?

Three congressional committees already are investigating the IRS for singling out tea party and other conservative groups during the 2010 congressional elections and the 2012 presidential election. But Holder's announcement would take the matter to another level if investigators are able to prove that laws were broken.

Ineffective management at the IRS allowed agents to improperly target tea party groups for more than 18 months, said a report released Tuesday by the Treasury inspector general for tax administration. The report lays much of the blame on IRS supervisors in Washington who oversaw a group of specialists in Cincinnati who screened applications for tax exempt status.

The agency started targeting groups with "Tea Party," "Patriots" or "9/12 Project" in their applications for tax exempt status in March 2010, the inspector general's report said. By August 2010, it was part of the written criteria used to flag groups for additional scrutiny.

Lois Lerner, who heads the IRS division that oversees tax exempt organizations, had been briefed on the matter in June 2011. She ordered the initial tea party criteria to be scrapped, but it later evolved to include groups that promoted the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The practice was ended in May 2012, the report said.

IRS agents were trying to determine whether the political activities of such groups disqualified them for tax exempt status. These groups were claiming tax exempt status as organizations promoting social welfare. Unlike other charitable groups, they can engage in political activity. But politics cannot be their primary mission.

It is up to the IRS to make the determination. But by using improper criteria, the IRS targeted some groups, even though there were no indications that they engaged in significant political activities, the report said. Other non-tea party groups that had significant political activities were not screened, the report said.

"The criteria developed by the Determinations Unit gives the appearance that the IRS is not impartial in conducting its mission," the report said.

The additional screening resulted in long delays as IRS agents asked intrusive, sometimes inappropriate questions, or merely let applications languish, the report said. Inappropriate questions included requests for lists of donors and the political affiliation of officers.

"Unfortunately, the report raises more questions the targeting of conservative groups. But it does than it answers," said House Oversight Commitsay a top supervisor in Washington did not ade- tee Chairman Darrell Issa, R-Calif.
