Rodenbeck said he told officers Addy might still be inside the house, and they broke windows in the baby's bedroom to check. Addy was not inside.

He said he saw Morris' body pulled out of the house.

He has not been in the house since she died, he said.

Kris Smith, fire investigator from the Kansas Fire Marshal's office, testified next. He said when he arrived at the house later that day, he noticed burn patterns that indicated an accelerant likely was used to start the

The heaviest damage was in and around the master bedroom where the bed and other furniture was heavily damaged, Smith said.

After debris was removed from the room, Scout, Smith's accelerant-sniffing K-9 partner, indicated the presence of accelerant in three areas of the master bedroom, Smith said.

Scout later indicated the presence of accelerant on the pants and a shoe Shank was wearing when arrested, Smith said, though the Kansas Bureau of Investigation was unable to discover any accelerant traces on Shank's clothing.

Shank dumped his dirty paper towels into the kitchen trash can, then pulled the bag out and deposited it by the door to the States' garage, she said.

States said she later drove Shank into Logan to meet law enforcement officers, including Mark Kendrick, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's lead investigator for the case and the fourth witness to testify at the preliminary hearing.

That night, Kendrick seized a trash bag and backpack from States' residence, he said. The bag contained latex gloves and tools along with bloody paper towels, and the backpack held clothes, food and other gear, he
