Officer Brad Parker of the Goodland Police Department handed out baseball cards late Sunday afternoon to boys who were riding bikes by the Topside Territory playground. Officers hand out the cards during he summer as a public relations tool, trying to promote good rapport with kids. The cards have safety tips on them, too. the men said, they have already tried that and it isn't working. "I have been extremely tough on Glickman," said Callicrate, referring to Dan Glickman of Wichita, the U.S. secretary of agriculture. He said Glickman has not responded to his numerous e-mails. Callicrate and Mike Schultz, a Brewster farmer who is chairman of the cattlemen's association, told Brownback about a lawsuit they and other cattle producers filed in 1996 seeking damages for depressed cattle prices due to use of captive supply contracts by IBP, a big meat packer with a processing plant in Garden City. Callicrate said a hearing on the class-action suit has been scheduled in September. Brownback, a Republican, said the farmer-stockmen may have better luck with the new administration, which will go in after elections this year. "We'll work on getting someone to enforce these issues," the senator said. "The best time to make people see is when they are new."

he said, that he told the people he wanted the stuff out of there. The items were then moved to another barn, which eventually filled up. However, that barn went into foreclo-

In the meantime, he urged the people in the room to vote. Cindy Fiedler, who works for the Cheyenne County appraiser's office, said the federal government has let her and her community down, ignoring rural residents. "The squeaky wheel gets the oil," she said, adding that environmental and animal-rights groups that lobby get their way, while "our freedom is taken away." Most people here don't have the time or resources to fight back, she said. "If you're busting butt on the farm or working 18 hours a day trying to start your own business, when do you do it?" Fiedler asked. Brownback said people here have to find the time. "I will guarantee you that the other side will be heard from," he said. Though emotions were peaking, Brownback said he had to leave because he had to meet with the Rotary Club in Colby. Constituents hung around to talk with Sen. Clark and Rep. Faber, who said they believe Brownback was sincere in his promise to find help.

sure and was sold at auction, so the items had to be cleaned out. Suhler thought that most of the stuff went to the town's landfill. Suhler said Wickham just wouldn't pick up the stuff. Also, he thought that Wickham needed to have more than a pickup and a flatbed to haul off the items. Since Springfield has gone to the Prowers County recycling program, said Town Manager Carol Brown, people are really using it. She said the town had to pay for bins, about $2,000 each, for glass, tin cans and newspapers. But the program is working well, and she thought items were picked up once a month. Lariviere, who still does the paperwork as a volunteer, said when the program was first started, only four counties and six towns took part. Now they have 13 counties and 46 communities. He said their program costs the counties or communities $2 per person per year. He said that the city or county usually pays for the service out of its sanitation or general funds and a whole county doesn't have to be in the program. The items are deposited in bins and a semitrailer truck comes around to empty the bins. The trailer holds about 80 cubic yards of material. Lariviere said he believes that Wickham promises things that he can't deliver. "He just has never done what he says he will do," Lariviere said.

puter purchases, $20,000 from road and bridge, $7,000 from central dispatch, $3,000 from the county attorney, $10,000 from general fund capital outlay and $5,000 from the extension service. "I am concerned about how we are depending on the increase in assessed valuation to give us increases," Davis said. "At some time in the future, if the trend reverses, we may find it difficult to raise taxes enough to pay for all the services." Davis was referring to the fact, with an increase of over $2,300,000 in valuation this year, the county can raise expenditures by $2,300 per property tax mill without raising the over all tax level. The 51.969 mill levy for 2000 raised $2,778,886 in revenue. With the increased valuation, the same levy will raise $2,899,039 for the 2001 budget. That means the county can spend about $120,000 more without increasing the tax rate. The commissioners received a resignation from Steve Evert as president and member of the Northwest Kansas District Free Fair board effective Oct. 1. "I have been on this board for 20 years, and have been associated with the fair in one form or another for an additional 20 years," Evert's letter said.

"I feel it is time for the fair board to have new leadership with new goals and ideas to continue on into the 21st century. I thank you for the opportunity of letting me serve on this board, and I will take with me many great memories." The commissioners took no action, but indicated they would probably expect a recommendation from the fair board for a recommendation for a replacement. In other business, the commissioners: • Accepted a bid from J and J Commodity of 6.5 cents per ton per mile for transporting the county trash to the Browning Ferris Industries landfill near Garden City. This is about $195 per loaded trailer, and about 2 cents per mile higher than the county was paying J and J under its old contract. The other bid was from Spud's Trucking for $500 per load. • Discussed a letter from Terranext about the drilling of two monitoring wells which had been requested by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment near the old landfill. Road and bridge supervisor Curt Way said Terranext was planning to have one well drilled on city property in November or December. The letter said the engineers were waiting for direction from the county on the other, which was to be drilled in a field north of the old landfill. Way said the county needed to reach an agreement with the landowner. The commissioners asked County Attorney Bonnie Selby to meet with Way and to talk to the landowner about the site. If there is a problem, the county could ask the state for help with the landowner, but the first step needs to come from the county. • Discussed the inspection and repairs to the 35-year old boiler in the basement of the courthouse done by representatives of American Boiler during the fair. The report said the boiler was in fairly good shape for its age, but that there were several items which need attention to keep it in compliance with regulations. The commissioners asked about replacing the boiler or changing to another heating system. William McKnight, building superintendent, said the inspector did not give him any estimates. Commissioners agreed that the county needed to follow up and get some estimates on replacing the boiler or changing to another central heating and cooling system. McKnight said he had asked the inspector about the problem with cooling the second floor, and the man had suggested the county might be able to moderate the problem by putting in a cold-air return from the second floor. "While we do not have to replace this today, we need to be planning for the future, and be looking at alternatives," Davis said. He suggested that local contractors could give the county suggestions as well as American Boiler. The next regular commission meeting will be 8 a.m. Thursday, Aug. 31, in the commission room on the main floor of the courthouse at Eighth and Broadway.
