

Happy Birthday!

Third- and fourth-grade students at Central Elementary School had cake and ice cream Friday afternoon to celebrate the school's 50th birthday. Ashley Heier, a fourth grader in Phyllis Zielke's class, reached for a cup of ice cream. Wilda Forbes (right), a cook at the school, served cake to the students.

Teachers to learn about drugs

Teachers will attend a drug awareness program later in September to teach them how to spot a student on drugs.

• Discussed selling a roundtop quonset the district owns on West 8th Street after Selby said someone had offered to buy it. The superintendent said the district stores desks, tables and other equipment in the quonset, which it bought for $25,000 in 1983. He said they have no other storage area, and the board put off discussion to get more information.

• Heard member Jane Philbrick read a letter from Marjorie Crabb thanking the district for letting senior citizens use the high school weight room during the school year. Selby said the district will let seniors into the weight room again this year and will pay an employee to supervise.

• Approved paying about $98,000 in bills and transferring about $278,000 from the general fund and the local option budget to other accounts.

• Heard from Mary Porterfield, president of the Goodland-National Education Association and a teacher at the high school, who said the School and Community Acting Together committee wants to improve communication between parents and teachers by printing brochures and holding information meetings.

• Amended the Professional Development Plan for technology teachers in the area that lists the steps teachers must go through to gain necessary points to keep their teaching certification.

Crew stocks space station

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)—Atlantis' crew drifted into the newest section of the international space station early Tuesday and began hauling equipment into the module, which will be home for the station's first permanent residents.

The Russian service module called Zvezda, which finally made it to space in July after more than two years of delays, made its orbital debut at 1:50 a.m. EDT when Atlantis commander Terrence Wilcutt and cosmonaut Yuri Malenchenko cracked the hatch open and floated in.

"We see a good view of the inside of the service module and a lot of people are smiling down here," Mission Control radioed up.

"Same here. It's absolutely beautiful," Wilcutt called back from inside the 43-foot segment.

Just like walking into a new house, the excitement quickly gave way to the business of moving. The crew of five astronauts and two cosmonauts had to begin offloading 1,300 pounds of gear from an unmanned Russian Progress supply ship previously docked to one end of Zvezda.

The station's first permanent residents are due to arrive in November: one American and two Russians who are to spend four months aboard the station.

There's one big difference between moving so much equipment on Earth and moving it while orbiting 233 miles up: no gravity.

An additional 4,800 pounds of supplies will also have to be brought into Zvezda from Atlantis. The service module was launched without most of its eventual contents because it was so heavy to begin with.

The cache includes an oxygen generator, carbon-dioxide removal system, color TV monitor, ham radio, exercise machine, batteries, wrenches, sockets, flashlights and the all-too-crucial toilet.

ter. People can vote on their favorite photo during the festival. There will be a community canvas out in front of the center from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday for anyone who wants to paint on it. It will cost $1 to paint for five minutes.

Stock car races will be held at 7 p.m. Friday and at 3 p.m. Saturday on the racetrack at the Sherman County fairgrounds.

A $2 festival button will allow discounts on events and merchant's sales. Button holders will be eligible for prize drawings to be held throughout the day. Buttons may be purchased before the festival at the Goodland Area Chamber of Commerce office or at their information booth during the street festival at 11th and Main. The chamber is sponsoring the festival.
