Accidents due to small percentage of Kansas drivers

WICHITA(AP)—Serious traffic accidents, those involving personal injury or at least $500 in damage, are concentrated among a small percentage of Kansas drivers, a new study shows.

The Wichita Eagle analyzed the Department of Transportation's accident database for 1990 through 1999 and reviewed hundreds of pages of accident

In the first of a series of stories, published Sunday, the newspaper said about 2,000 Kansas drivers had five or more serious accidents during the decade. At least 20 of them were involved in 10 accidents or more, and most have kept their licenses.

ing such a small group — about 1 of every 1,000 licensed drivers — surprised state and local officials. Many said they had no idea there were drivers with 10 serious wrecks in a decade.

Accidents involving the nearly 2,000 drivers who had five or more serious wrecks injured 5,000 people and killed 50. Eighty percent of those drivers were men, more than a fourth of them now 24 to 28 years old. The group also included two 19-year-old women and nine men in Accidents involving the 20 people killed four. All of those drivers were men, 18 of them were alive and 15 were licensed. One of the 20 died this spring, and another was killed in a 1998 accident.

Nearly half the state's 1.9 million currently licensed drivers, meanwhile, didn't have a serious accident on their record during the 1990s. About 90 percenthad one serious wreck, or none at all
