Getting new curb, gutter

Phil Erickson, part of Goodland's city crew, smoothed a new curb and gutter Wednesday afternoon on 12th Street in front of the Carnegie Arts Center. He said the old gutter had sunken in and was causing drainage problems in front of the center. The repairs will be Photo by Rachel Miscall/The Goodland Daily News finished next week.

Farmerenjoys challenge grew up in Sublette, where he graduated from high school. He earned a bachelor's degree in education in 1971 from Emporia State University.

After he served in the Army, he returned to Sublette to farm. Then in 1984, he and his family came to farm in Sherman County.

His wife, Janet, has taught grade school at Goodland for 16 years. They have a son, Sean, 20, who lives in Longmont, Colo.

Davis, who was elected as commissioner in 1996, says he enjoys the challenges of the job.

"If you're in it for prestige," he said, 'you're not in it for the right reasons." He said he thinks he has met the challenges in the best interest of the county. "I will continue doing so if re-elected," he added. Until June, Davis served nine years on. as a board member for Frontier Equity Exchange, when he had to go off for a year. He was also on the Soil Conservation District board until he was elected county commissioner.

to provide money for all the services the county supports and that the commissioners try to spend the money as wisely as they can.

"It's not easy," he said. "The only way the county can raise more money is to raise taxes.'

He said there is a weed spraying program in place for both the shoulders and ditches of county roads, but the money has to be there for the work to be done.

Davis said the commissioners have increased the money in next year's budget for the noxious weed department, which includes weed spraying, and have hired a part-time man to help. They also want to continue to improve the roads.

When asked why people should vote for him, Davis said because he has experience in all segments of the county and is not afraid to meet problems head

"I'm willing to provide answers, not excuses," he said. "Again, there are people who aren't going to get the answers they want, but the decision has to be made in the best interest of all of

Second Bush-Gore debate turns out to be polite affair

Bush took turns ences on diplomatic details. discussing America's role abroad, mixing argument and agreement on foreign policy, in a campaign debate that turned confrontational when they got to issues of capability and credibility. Their second debate Wednesday night in their neck-and-neck campaign produced no clear breakthroughs for either nominee, with one more round coming in St. Louis next Tuesday, exactly three weeks before one is elected president.

They met this time in the chapel at Wake Forest University, where for an hour of the 90-minute debate the tone was as subdued as the setting. Then they got personal.

rors, a line of attack that Bush and his allies have used to challenge the Democrat's credibility and one the Republican said voters should judge.

Gore said he couldn't promise to never get another detail wrong, only president he would "work my heart out to get the big things right."

Thursday, he and wife Tipper were returning home to Washington. Bush and his wife Laura were scheduled to campaign in Philadelphia and be interviewed on a cable TV show aimed at women before heading to Michigan.

Instant public opinion polls by ABC News, CBS News, NBC News and CNN-USA Today gave Bush higher marks in Wednesday night's debate.

Snap polls after their first debate in Boston on Oct. 3 said Gore did best. But in the days that followed, it was Bush who gained in the national polls and narrowed Gore's edge into an even race.

Bush and Gore basically agreed on U.S. policy in the Middle East crisis, crimes. That issue led Bush to a misboth demanding that Yasser Arafat act statement he repeated twice.

> Bush praised the Democratic administration for efforts to calm the situation. "I think during the campaign, particularly now during this difficult period, we ought to be speaking with one voice," the Texas governor said.

Vice President Gore said America's role as a broker in the Middle East is a vital, strategic asset that should be preserved, and Bush said he thought so, too.

They also agreed on U.S. policy toward Yugoslavia, saying that but for the use of NATO force against the Serbians, Slobodan Milosevic would not have fallen to an elected president.

But while they agreed on the use of Gore admitted making factual er- force there, they differed on the broader issue of when America should take action abroad. Bush said he would commit troops when it serves "our nation's strategic interests" but opposed what he called nation building missions. Gore said that would seem to that he would try. But he said that as rule out action to enforce American values against genocide and ethnic cleansing.

"We can't be all things to all people headed to a Milwaukee rally before in the world," Bush said. "And I think that's where maybe the vice president and I begin to have some differences. I am worried about overcommitting our military around the world. I want to be judicious in its use."

> Gore said he would be judicious, too. "Now, just because we cannot be involved everywhere, and shouldn't be, doesn't mean that we should shy away from going in anywhere."

That left the line blurred, but the differences hardened on domestic issues. Both agreed there should be a federal law against racial profiling, but collided on whether criminal penalties should be sharpened for alleged hate FOR COUNTY CLERK
