Gardeners can prune certain shrubs this time of year

This is the time of year when gardeners are eager to get out and do something in the landscape. One chore that can be taken care of now is pruning certain shrubs. Often, gardeners approach pruning with trepidation, but it is not as difficult as it may seem. Remember, not all shrubs need to be pruned such as Witch hazel, and certain shrubs should not be pruned at this time of year. Shrubs are pruned to maintain or reduce size, rejuvenate growth or to remove diseased, dead or damaged branches.

Deciduous shrubs are those that lose their leaves each winter. Evergreen shrubs maintain foliage all year and include yews and junipers. Deciduous shrubs are placed into three groups:

• Those that flower in the spring on pruned in late winter to early spring.

• Those that flower later in the year on the current season's growth.

• Those that may produce flowers, but those flowers are of little ornamental value.

Shrubs that flower in the spring should not be pruned until immediately after flowering. Though pruning earlier will not harm the health of the plant, the flowering display will be reduced. Examples of these types of plants include forsythia, lilac and mock orange. Shrubs that bloom on of a branch by cutting it back to a bud current season's growth or that do not and is used for either reducing height produce ornamental flowers are best or keeping a shrub compact.

Examples include Rose-of-Sharon, Bumald Spirea and Japanese Spirea. Pruning during the spring allows threat from insects or disease. There is no need to treat pruning cuts with paints or sealers. In fact, some of these products may retard healing. There are three basic methods used in pruning shrubs. They are thinning, heading back and rejuvenating.

Thinning is used to thin out branches from a shrub that is too dense. It is accomplished by removing most of the inward growing twigs by either cutting them back to a larger branch or cutting them back to just above an outward facing bud. On multi-stemmed shrubs, the oldest canes may be completely removed.

Heading back is removing the end Branches are not cut back to a uni-

Rejuvenation is the most severe type of pruning and may be used on multi-stem shrubs that have become too large with too many old branches to justify saving the younger canes. All stems are cut back to 3- to 5-inch stubs. This works well for spirea, forsythia, pyracantha, ninebark, Russian almond, little leaf mock orange, shrub roses and flowering quince.

And while we are talking about pruning, master gardener Christy Rasure will be hosting a tree pruning work shop on Monday, March 5. The demonstration will start at 1 p.m. at Kevin and Christy Rasure's place which is three miles west of Goodland on the Eighth Street road. For information on this or to get a complete agenda, please call the Sherman County Extension Office at 899-4880
