The Regional Prevention Center not just “cool office”

Occasionally I have someone ask me “What do you do at the Prevention Center?” or comment “It must be nice to sit down in a cool/warm place and do office work.”

These are questions are welcome because it then gives me the opportunity to give them a little bit of information about what the Regional Prevention Center has done, is doing and will continue to do for our community. All of our services are free. We have a lending library of books and videos, brochures and pamphlets. Not only do we offer anti-alcohol, tobacco and other drug education, but there are many other things that we do, such as:

- With the assistance of high school counselor Rhonda Williams, we found five students who were interested in attending the Smoke-Free Teens Are Rising rally in Colby. They enjoyed it, and eventually received a $1,500 grant from an application we submitted at this rally, to promote tobacco-free activities for the youth in our community.

- With this money, we have arranged to have speaker Don Young (a cancer survivor) come on Sept. 4 and provide two presentations about the dangers of tobacco. If you would like more information about this, please contact me at the office, 899-3848.

cris lovington

- prevention center

This also clued us in with a possible $5,000 grant for more anti-tobacco projects. Why tobacco? Because research shows it to be the first drug kids as young as 12 start with, before getting into other drugs. We keep an eye and ear open for activities like the rally to invite kids to attend.

- Last year, the center staff were all certified in teaching Prime for Life: Under 21 for minors in trouble for transportation of open container, consumption or possession of alcohol. Since the beginning of the year, the center has provided three classes in Sherman County.

- On May 1, the Community Partnership for Prevention/Education provided a community awareness night regarding “Sexual Assault.” Professionals in the medical, law and law enforcement fields served as volunteer panelists.

The committee meets once a month and agreed to serve as the Juvenile Justice Authority focus group. We are always looking for more members who are interested in preventing juvenile delinquency.

We have discussed having a methamphetamine workshop here in Goodland for law enforcement, medical staff, retailers and anyone else interested in knowing more about this dangerously growing epidemic.

- It has taken a few months, but the center has also assisted in the initiation of a Big Brother-Big Sister group and will continue to help in its plans to get an office open.

The initiation of a youth group, MAS (Motivation + Achievement = Success) has blossomed into an active group for kids who don't feel like they “fit in” with other local youth groups. We have 10 active youth and three adult sponsors.

- The center also continues to assist the PRIDE committee of Kanorado with their activities and submit an article to the “KAPER” paper.

What other things is the center involved with? We continue to provide support to organizations and groups of the community, church and schools, such as the sister high school project, Career and Health Fairs, Sherman County Multi-Disciplinary team, Translations/Interpretations, American Red Cross, County Extension, Hispanic Advisory Board activities and its quarterly newsletter, weekly Goodland Daily News article and La Hora Spanish radio show on Sunday afternoons. We hope to get things going for 24 Hour Relay 2002.

We also serve on the Community Corrections board and supporting the efforts of Our Gang Inc. (an HIV/AIDS awareness project) for our Hispanic population.

We have assisted Harvest America in finding mentor and job site placements for five students. We serve on the Harvest America board, which meets quarterly. The local Harvest America Target Area Council meets once a month.

Sit and do office work? Just occasionally. Not if we want to promote healthy choices for our community. It doesn't happen from the office alone.

What I have mentioned is only a brief description about what goes on here in this office only! Even though I am one staff person in this satellite office, I say “we” because our main office, which serves northwest Kansas, is in Colby and there is a satellite office in Atwood, and when we need help, we know we can count on each other. Sue, Janet and Ashley make up the Colby office and Gloria is at the Atwood office. Every county in Kansas is served by a Regional Prevention Center.

The Goodland office has had a small face-lift, which the youth group and their sponsors have done themselves. We encourage you to stop by and visit us or any of the three offices.

Research shows that greenhouse gasses do have an adverse and immediate effect on people's health

WASHINGTON (AP) — As nations debate the future effect on the climate of burning fossil fuels, a study finds no question that air pollution from exhaust pipes and smoke stacks already is killing people worldwide.

“It is our best estimate more people are being killed by air pollution from traffic than from traffic crashes,” said Devra Lee Davis, first author of the study appearing Friday in the journal Science.

Davis, a professor at Carnegie Mellon University's Heinz School for Public Policy and Management in Pittsburgh, said ozone, particulates, carbon dioxide and other pollutants from the combustion of fossil fuels may affect the climate in coming decades.

But she said her team found they already are public health hazards.

“There are more than a thousand studies from 20 countries all showing that you can predict a certain death rate based on the amount of pollution,” Davis said.

She said the burning of gasoline and coal are causing people to die prematurely from asthma, heart disease and lung disorders.

“We hope policy-makers will understand that energy decisions and technology decisions are fundamentally public health decisions,” she said.

In the study, Davis and four co-authors researched the health effects of pollution from fossil-fuels on the rate of death in four cities — Sao Paulo, Brazil; Mexico City; Santiago, Chile; and New York — and found that adopting greenhouse gas abatement technologies now available would save 64,000 lives over the next 20 years in those cities.

It would also prevent 65,000 cases of chronic bronchitis and save about 37 million person-days of restricted or lost work, the researchers estimated.

Davis said although the study concentrated on just four cities, the conclusions probably could be applied to cities worldwide.

She said the data are consistent with a World Health Organization study that estimated that air pollution would cause about 8 million deaths worldwide by 2020.

“Policies to mitigate (greenhouse gases) can yield substantive and immediate benefits to the 3 billion people currently residing in urban areas throughout the world,” the study's authors claim.

“We're not talking about Buck Rogers-like, futuristic technologies” to reduce pollution from burning fossil fuels, said Davis.

“If the technologies we now have on the shelf were adopted quickly, they would have an immediate effect on public health.”

Dr. Jonathan Patz of the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health said the study by Davis and her co-authors draws “an important conclusion.”

“They show that air pollution does have an important effect on the mortality and morbidity of urban dwellers,” he said.

“It shows that there are significant health benefits to be had from reducing emissions from the burning of fossil fuels.”

Carbon dioxide and other gases from the burning of coal and oil have been blamed by many researchers for warming of the global climate.

Some have predicted long-term and varied global effects, including such phenomena as the melting glaciers, rising sea levels and recurring weather extremes.
