today in history

Aug. 22, 1901 The rain that was so badly needed during July is now being supplied in abundant quantity. Wednesday evening the heaviest rain of the year began falling about 7:30 and continued throughout the greater portion of the night. The streets of Goodland had more the appearance of small lakes than business thoroughfares. From the extremely hot days of last month the weather has turned to one of early fall, the nights being almost uncomfortably cool while the days are far from hot. These late rains will make some late corn and forage crops, and have stimulated the falling cattle market. From The Goodland Republic/Information provided by The
