Intelligence reports suggest more attacks

WASHINGTON (AP)—U.S. intelligence is concerned that Osama bin Laden's inner circle has issued new orders for attacks against Americans and that the terrorists might strike even if their contact is cut off from Afghanistan, officials say.

The terrorist alert the FBI issued for this week was based on intelligence that emerged over the weekend involving Afghanistan and known al-Qaida supporters elsewhere in the world, including Canada, the officials said Tuesday.

The officials, who described the information to The Associated Press only on condition of anonymity, said some of the intelligence suggested one of bin Laden's lieutenants in Afghanistan recently urged new attacks on Americans. They declined to be more specific.

U.S. officials long have suspected bin Laden's top deputies, Ayman al-Zawahri and Mohammed Atef, were involved in the planning or support of the Sept. 11 suicide hijackings that killed 5,000 people.

They cautioned, however, that U.S. intelligence officials also consider it possible the terrorists are aware their communications are being monitored and may be spreading false information deliberately.

"My guess is the terrorist network is not going to avoid using the tool of disinformation," said Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee.

The officials said other information that led to the warning from Attorney General John Ashcroft on Monday suggested known al-Qaida operatives in Canada, Asia and elsewhere were discussing new attacks.

Canadian Solicitor General Lawrence MacAulay, who oversees his nation's law enforcement and intelligence, said Tuesday that information his country provided to the United States was behind the warning.

Information provided to the FBI from the Canadian Security Intelligence Service "led Mr. Ashcroft to make the statement that he made yesterday," MacAulay said.

The information about the intelligence came as the FBI searched for clues on how a New York woman with no ties to the media or postal service became infected with the most lethal form of anthrax.

Agents were testing her workplace and home and retracing her steps to see how she might have inhaled the deadly anthrax spores and whether the bacteria was similar to the strains found in letters to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, NBC News anchor Tom Brokaw and the New York Post.

An FBI official also acknowledged Tuesday that the agency had not yet tested quarantined mail on Capitol Hill for possible cross-contamination with anthrax from the Daschle letter. The testimony from Agent James Jarboe prompted a stern bipartisan letter from two congressmen to FBI Director Robert Mueller.

"This delay is very disturbing, as over two weeks have passed since the Daschle letter was opened," wrote Reps. Dan Burton, R-Ind., and Henry Waxman, D-Calif.

Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge also fended off criticism Tuesday from other members of Congress that the administration was unnecessarily alarming the public by issuing terrorism alerts with only general information about the nature of the threats.

"You wonder what these warnings achieve, other than to create more fear," Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., said.
