Elderly may be taken advantage of

Dear Plain Sense: Not only do I worry about my elderly mother's health, but now I find her too trustful of sales people and am afraid she will be taken advantage of financially. What do we need to be aware of?

Growing up in a time when doors were never locked and everyone looked out for their neighbor, it is often difficult for some of our elderly loved ones to realize when they are being taken advantage of.

Maintaining good communication and regular contact with elderly parents is one way to be more aware of exploitation attempts. Be particularly mindful of the following:

- Nothing is free! Encourage your mother to say "no" when promised something for nothing.
- Don't let salespeople in your home, or fall for their hard-luck stories. Encourage her to let you know if this happens.
- Encourage your mother to get help from someone else before making decisions about buying or investing.

Ask the caller to mail the information.

club news

The 18 members of the Redwood Social Club have spent the summer meetings with lessons and fun. Frances Jones was the hostess for the May meeting when Elaine Schwendener gave the lesson on Wardrobe Management.

Edith Dye and Beulah McClung were co-hostesses in June when the theme was Travel Talk as Gertrude Carroll told about her visit to the Wrigley Mansion.

In July, Ruth Ross presented the finer points of the book "Ten Day Beauty Boot Camp" with such fine hints as putting bay leaves in your wardrobe for a fresh smell and take a trench coat when traveling as it goes with everything.

For feeling great, get nine hours of sleep was another hint, and there were

Then call back if interested.

• Never give out credit card, checking account or social security numbers for identification or verification purposes.

• Never send cash. Don't send money with someone who arranges to pick it up at your home (unless it's pizza delivery!).

• Beware of high-pressure salespeople. They are trying to make a living for themselves and don't always have the best interests of the consumer in mind.

• Encourage your mother to get help from someone else before making decisions about buying or investing.

Encourage your mother to let you know right away if she has been approached about or agreed to purchase any item. Together you can determine if it is necessary.

If you find out soon enough, any such transactions can be canceled within a specific time. Your local Area Agency on Aging can be of assistance in these matters, particularly regarding issues of fraud and deception of the elderly.

The grand finale of the summer in August was the book review given by Edith Dye on "It's Not About the Bikes," the story of the author Lance Armstrong and how he dealt with fighting cancer.

It is a remarkable story that lets the reader in on the thoughts and feelings of despair and faith.

Roll call was answered by naming a favorite book, and the choices ranged from the Bible to Harry Potter.

Other recommended books were "The Red Tent," "Seven Alone," the Mitford books, D.C. Andrews' books, history books, such as "Centennial," and the talking book selections of Gilbert Morris.

Elaine Schwendener and Ruth

Morton co-hosted and served homemade ice cream and goodies.

The group has chosen the Family Consumer Education Club Collect by Mary Stewart as their motto.

To raise money for club members' favorite charities, a monthly fee is paid.

Names were put into a pot and two names are drawn for the door prizes which were won by Beulah McClung and Kathryn Kuhlman.

Other members of the club are Helen McDaniels, Dorothy Armstrong, Phyllis Daniels, Loraine Fenner, Lavaughn Glasco, Eleanor Kelly, Arleta Musil and Naomi Wade.

The fall season will start off with an "Eat Out Day" at 11:30 a.m. on Sept. 19. A tour of the Antique Warehouse will follow.
