

Drug developed as anesthesia used illegally

Phencyclidine (PCP) was developed in the 1950s as an intravenous anesthetic.

Use of PCP in humans was discontinued in 1965 because it was found that patients often became agitated, delusional and irrational while recovering from its anesthetic effects.

PCP is illegally manufactured in laboratories and is sold on the street by such names as "angel dust," "ozone," "wack" and "rocket fuel." "Killer joints" and "crystal supergrass" are names that refer to PCP combined with marijuana. The variety of street names for PCP reflect its bizarre and volatile effects.

PCP is a white crystalline powder that is readily soluble in water or alcohol. It has a distinctively bitter chemical taste.

PCP can be mixed easily with dyes and turns up on the illicit drug market in a variety of tablets, capsules and colored powders.

It is normally used in one of three ways: snorted, smoked or eaten. For smoking, PCP is often applied to a leafy material such as mint, parsley, oregano or marijuana.

PCP is addictive; that is, its use often leads to psychological dependence, craving and the compulsive seeking of PCP.

It was first introduced as a street drug in the 1960s and quickly gained a reputation as a drug that could cause bad reactions and was not worth the risk.

Many people, after using the drug once, will not knowingly use it again. Yet, others use it consistently and regularly. Some persist in using PCP because of its addicting properties. Others cite feelings of strength, power, invulnerability and a numbing effect on the mind as reasons for their continued PCP use.

Many PCP users are brought to emergency rooms because of the drug's unpleasant psychological effects or because of overdoses. In a hospital or detention setting, users become violent or suicidal and are very dangerous to themselves and others. They should not be left alone.

At low to moderate doses, physiological effects of PCP include a slight increase in breathing rate and a more pronounced rise in blood pressure and pulse rate. Respiration becomes shallow, and flushing and profuse sweating occur.

Numbness of the extremities and muscular incoordination also may occur. Psychological effects include distinct changes in body awareness, similar to those associated with alcohol intoxication.

Use of PCP among adolescents may interfere with hormones related to normal growth and development as well as the learning process.

High doses of PCP cause a drop in blood pressure, pulse rate and respiration. This may be accompanied by nausea, vomiting, blurred vision, flicking up and down of the eyes, drooling, loss of balance and dizziness.

High doses of PCP can also cause seizures, coma and death. Death most often is the result of accidental injury or suicide during PCP intoxication.

Psychological effects at high doses include illusions and hallucinations. PCP can cause effects that mimic symptoms of schizophrenia, such as delusions, paranoia, disordered thinking, a sensation of distance from one's environment and catatonia. Speech is often sparse and garbled.

People who use PCP for long periods report memory loss, difficulties with speech and thinking, depression and weight loss. These symptoms can persist up to a year after ceasing PCP use.

Mood disorders have also been reported. PCP has sedative effects, and its interactions with other central nervous system depressants, such as alcohol and benzodiazepines, can lead to coma or accidental overdose.

School board sells Edson gym to Goodland business owners while Short, Kathy Russell, Mike Campbell and Eric Gray were against it. Campbell suggested the district would make more money if it advertised the facility as a grain bin.

Harrison and Simpson said they planned to hold auctions in the gym, rent it back to the district for part of the year and keep the facility open to the Edson community. They said they would buy a retractable floor covering, drill a new well and possibly tear down the old, dilapidated school building next to the gym.

Duell said he thought the board should have sold to TNT because it would operate a viable business in the building. After the board put selling the gym on the back burner for a few months, Duell brought up the subject again during the summer.

The board decided to have the gym appraised, finding out in August that it's valued at $28,700. The appraiser advised the district it could get the most money if it marketed the facility as a warehouse.

The district did that, placing ads in newspapers in Goodland, Salina and Denver. Bidders had the choice of either buying the facility outright or renting it back to the district for part of the year.

Members didn't discuss selling the gym much before deciding to do it. Selby said he will talk with Herl, Wilkens and a lawyer about drawing up a lease contract.

Campbell asked if the board would be able to see the contract before it is finalized. Other members said they didn't think that was necessary. Selby said if he has problems he will bring it back to the board.

Wilkens said this morning that he and Herl, who are involved with the Mid-America Youth Basketball organization, will allow people to practice basketball or other sports in the gym.

Wilkens, who grew up in Goodland, said he decided to buy the gym because he remembers playing basketball in it during high school and he wants to give his three sons and other young people a place to practice sports.

He said he and Herl haven't discussed yet whether they will fix the well near the gym, which is no longer pumping water for the building.

FBI terror analyst latest victim of sniper lice after the shooting and investigators were still interviewing them.

"We have been receiving quite a bit of information from witnesses," Manger said. "Information is always the key in solving cases like this."

Police closed highways around Falls Church, about 10 miles west of the nation's capital, after the shooting and Manger said police were on the lookout for a light-colored Chevrolet Astro van with a burned-out left rear tail light and a chrome ladder on its roof. The highways were reopened in time for morning rush hour and no arrests were reported.

"There are a fair number of ways to leave the area," Manger said. "We made a number of traffic stops. I am unaware of any pursuits."

Franklin was felled by a single shot to the head about 9:15 p.m. as she stood in the parking lot of the blocks-long shopping center. All the other deaths in the sniper spree were also caused by one shot.

Outside the Home Depot today, a line of officers on their hands and knees scoured the covered parking deck for evidence, and a tow truck hauled away the victim's car — a small red convertible with a black cloth top.

The Washington Post, quoting an FBI chaplain at Franklin's home, reported on its Web site that Franklin and her husband were planning to move Friday to another home in the area and were at Home Depot to buy supplies.

The center where Franklin worked, established in 1998, is the only FBI organization scheduled to transfer to the Department of Homeland Security under the Bush administration's proposal.

The shooting spree that has terrorized residents in the Washington area began Oct. 2 in Montgomery County, Md. With Monday's shooting, the toll has grown to nine people killed and two seriously wounded in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

"Ballistic evidence has conclusively linked this case to the other murders in the area," Manger said.

Montgomery County Police Chief Charles Moose, who is leading the task force investigating the shootings, was on the scene of the latest shooting.

Monday's killing happened near one of northern Virginia's busiest intersections, where major arteries come together to form seven corners. Virginia State Police said the van was last seen traveling east on Route 50 from Falls Church. Interstates 66 and 495 are nearby.

Accident kills St. Francis teen, critically injures another

A St. Francis teen was killed and another critically injured Sunday in a car accident in Kersey, Colo., near Greeley.

Navarro

Christa Navarro, 17, was pronounced dead upon arriving at North Colorado Medical Center. She was a passenger in a Ford Escort driven by Richard "Ricky" Straub, 18, who was in critical condition Sunday night at the medical center with massive head and internal injuries. On Tuesday, Straub was reported to be in critical condition.

Patrick Laybourn, 19, of Cope, Colo., was driving a Pontiac Grand Prix west on U.S. 34 at 11:11 a.m. Sunday when Straub turned in front of him to get onto Colorado 37, a witness and the Colorado State Patrol reported.

Laybourn was wearing a seat belt and sustained minor injuries. He was treated at North Colorado Medical Center and released.

Both teens in the Escort were not wearing seat belts, Russ Zeller, a spokesman for the Colorado Highway Patrol, said.

Navarro was a senior at St. Francis Community High School and the daughter of Deonn and Kip Wiese of St. Francis and Chris and Christina Navarro of Las Cruces, N.M.

The funeral service has been set for 10:30 a.m. on Thursday at the Peace Lutheran Church at College and Jackson streets in St. Francis.

The Greeley Daily Tribune reported the intersection where the accident occurred is considered "an intersection some residents there (in Kersey) have dreaded crossing for years."

Three years ago, an 18-year-old girl was killed after pulling out in front of a semi-trailer. Kersey Mayor Tim Phippard said the town appealed to the Colorado Department of Transportation but was unsuccessful in having a traffic light installed at the intersection.
