Dear Plain Sense: School is in session again, and I dread the homework hassles we seem to have almost every evening at our house. The kids wait until the last minute to get started, or want me to help when I'm busy with something else. We all seem to end up in a bad mood. Any suggestions?

Assuming that everyone involved understands the importance of completing homework assignments, sometimes the first step is just good planning and organization.

And most of us can benefit from some assistance in getting organized when we have work to do. Sometimes the biggest challenge is just sitting down and getting started. Begin developing good homework habits when children are young, so that good study habits will be in place as they get older.

Here are some suggestions:

• Sit down with the children and work together on a plan for completing homework. Allowing them some input will make them feel more a part of the decision-making involved, thus increasing cooperation.

Pumkins may not make it to Halloween this year

With a warm, dry autumn like we've had, early picked pumpkins may not make it to Halloween. Pumpkins don't keep very well for several reasons.

If they are harvested early, the natural rind won't be developed, and there won't be a waxy layer over that rind to keep the pumpkins from drying out. Then, the pumpkins may shrivel and dry up before the autumn season. As pumpkins enter the marketplace a little earlier than they used to, there is a better chance that they may not be completely mature when harvested Pumpkins also keep better in cooler
