DILI, East Timor — Police arrested 80 people following violence in the East Timorese capital that left three dead and dozens of buildings — including the prime minister's residence

The unrest in Dili has been the worst in East Timor since it became the world's newest nation in May, and highlights rising discontent with the government. Most of East Timor's 800,000 people are desperately poor and have seen few benefits of indepen-

Government leaders said they had formed an independent commission to investigate the shootings and riots, which flared Wednesday but had subsided by today, with about 20 students battling police. Officers fired warning shots and the protesters fled on foot. No one was hurt in the clashes.

The government said it had arrested 80 people suspected of participating in "The investigation will be done in a very short time and all people considered guilty will face justice, even if it's the police or members of the military," Prime Minister Mari Alkatiri said at a press conference in Dili.

Trouble started Tuesday after 500 students gathered at police headquarters in Dili to demand the release of a fellow student arrested for alleged gang violence.

The protest continued into Wednesday when students started throwing stones at Timorese and U.N. police. Witnesses said officers opened fire, killing three people, including a 16year-old boy. U.N. officials said two people died. The deaths touched off the wave of rioting.

A two-month rebellion in Ivory Coast, the world's leading cocoa producer and a former French colony, has degenerated into a multi-fronted war, and the fiercest battles are being fought between government forces and rebel groups in the west.

"Some people don't want to go out, because the bodies in the streets are decomposing, and it smells bad," said a man, who identified himself only by his first name, Ndri. He fled from Man to Duekoue on Wednesday in a battered blue car, flying a white flag from
