

Confusion may hinder recovery

Some male survivors' confusion about their sexual orientation can hinder their recovery.

While some males assaulted as boys by older males come to realize that while they don't want to replicate the abusive component of their experience, they do want to explore consensual interactions with males.

Gaining clarity about one's sexuality is much more difficult for sexual assault survivors. Those dealing with survivors often find they may cause "frustration or anger" by not wanting to report their assault, call it assault or change problematic or even destructive behavior.

We may become irritated with the survivors' rate of recovery or unwillingness to do things that we objectively know would be positive for them.

Since the root of eating disorders, depression, and addictions is often incest or other types of sexual assault, our attention can be misdirected by manifestations of these "symptoms."

When dealing with perpetrators, they too may cause "frustration or anger" by not wanting to call their behavior assault, change problematic behavior, etc. Their resistance may seem insane.

Their alleged act may well contribute to their circle of friends. The presumption of innocent until proven guilty can be sorely tested. Additionally, we may know or like them as people and experience dif-iculty believing they could do this. We don't have to judge, heal or solve this problem alone. Survivors need support, not rescue. We can help by first looking at our resistance or denial and by knowing our own biases and prejudices.

And if we can't or won't listen at that particular time because we are busy or stressed or because this brings up discomfort from personal experience; we do not have to at the moment.

Golf competition starts Taylor reunion

The Taylor Cousins Reunion of 2003 began on Friday afternoon, July 11, at Sugar Hills Country Club. Golfers from Colorado, Missouri and North Carolina gathered to enjoy the annual competition.

Gary and Tootie Tagtmeyer from North Carolina carried off the trophies provided by Bob Dimmitt of St. Louis.

The annual Saturday noon cook-out, hosted by the Rev. Paul McNall of Leoti, was held at the Four Sisters Bed and Breakfast, 1204 Center. Tables and chairs in the yard provided a great place for those attending to catch up on the activities of the past year.

And the time allowed anticipation to build for the home-made ice cream feed that always comes in the evening.

A catered dinner at noon on Sunday was at the Goodland Senior Center: roast beef, fried chicken, mashed potatoes and gravy, salad, vegetables, desserts and drinks. Later, music was provided by piano and guitars.

The cousins attending are descendants of two Sherman County pioneer families, Ira and Wesley Taylor, who settled in the county in the first decade of the 1900s. Those present also came from Wyoming, Nebraska, Texas and Arizona.

A highlight of this year's reunion was a notebook filled with the genealogy of the Taylor families, including the parents of Ira and Wesley Taylor, Thomas G. and Elizabeth Jane Taylor.

The notebook had been researched and compiled by a cousin from Phoenix, Arthur Wesley Taylor, a great-grandson of Wesley Taylor.

The next annual reunion is scheduled for Friday-Sunday, July 16-18, 2004.
