November 6, 1903: St. Paul’s Episcopal Church — Services next Sunday. Sunday school at 10 o’clock, morning service at 11. Evening service at 7:30. The Rev. C.L. Adams

November 7, 1903: The Thistle Disappearing — Northwestern Cattleman Found That It Was Good Fodder — Nearly two years ago, the secretary of the state board of agriculture, issued a bulletin in which he declared that the Russian thistle, when properly cured, made excellent feed for stock.

Since then the thistle has ceased to grow wild in the northwestern part of the state, where it was most plentiful at that time. In many of the counties where it was very common a few years ago, it has now become extinct.

A few years ago, the Russian thistle was the most dreaded weed pest known to the farmers. It was said that if it once started, it would drive out all other vegetation.

Notwithstanding all precautions, the seed was brought into northwest Kansas with other seed, and the plant gained a firm foothold in several counties.

The papers printed columns of matter about the necessity of uprooting it, and the legislature even passed a law on the subject, but the thistle continued to thrive.

Then some cattlemen in the northwest discovered that cattle eat it and they tried putting some up as hay.

The experiment was a success, as the cattle would eat it in preference to most other kinds of hay, and it produced good results. Now it seems that the weed is dying out since it has been discovered to have merits.

A recent report from Wyoming says of an attempt to cultivate the plant in that state near Laramie: experimenting of planting Russian thistle as a forage crop.

The result was a failure owing to the wetness of the season as it flourishes only on extremely dry ground. Cattle devour the plant eagerly. They propose to sow a large tract of land next season and are confident they can raise a big crop.
