ntbetz@nwkansas.com A Goodland High School grad has developed a new way to show off the city's sights, and asked the City Commission on Monday to consider being part of the project.

Josh Cech, who graduated in May, told the three commissioners present that he had started a company called Local 360, and was talking to businesses about putting their business on his web site. Cech said he will be going to college at Fort Hays State University, and will be close enough to be able to help manage the sites.

He showed the commissioners a computer representation of the site he is thinking of for Goodland, which features 360-degree panoramic shots that show off the Cechifhis site could be linked to the money for marketing.
