July begins grub time

We normally see grub activity pick up during July, matching the rule-of-thumb Fourth of July time frame for peak flights of the adult "masked chafers."

ag notebook

The larvae of "masked chafers" are the annual white grubs we see in our lawns. On average, eggs deposited by beetles hatch in 10-14 days. Grub development is relatively rapid. By mid to late September, third instar larvae voraciously feed on grass roots, causing visible damage to turf.

In situations where perfect stands of turf are expected, now through mid-July is the optimal time to apply preventative insecticides. The active ingredients, imidacloprid and halofenozide, have proven effectiveness against annual white grubs as a nerve poison and as an insect growth regulator, respectively.

For homeowners, the most readily available imidacloprid products are Season Long Grub Control, GrubEX, Grub No More and Grub Beater.

Complete Insect Killer is a combination of imidacloprid and beta-cyfluthrin. Halofenozide is the active ingredient contained in Kill-A-Grub. Traditional grub insecticides such as Dyllox are normally applied in late July, after grubs are present, or as a rescue treatment once damage is seen.
