

Wheat stripe rust, leaf rust showing up in Texas

There have been many reports coming out about stripe and leaf rust outbreaks to the south of us. Erick DeWolf, K-State wheat plant pathologist, has been keeping a close eye on disease situation in wheat in Texas and Oklahoma. This is due to the fact that both leaf and stripe rust move with the wind. At this time, reports are indicating that leaf rust and stripe rust remain at low levels in most fields.

The reports of stripe rust on varieties previously thought to be resistant to the disease have continued to flow from College Station, Texas. Many varieties grown widely in Kansas previously thought to be resistant to stripe rust are being affected, including Jagalene, Jagger, Fuller, Art, and Santa Fe. At College Station, it appears that stripe rust has moved to the flag leaves and is still causing significant damage. Earlier reports indicated there may be increasing resistance when plants were infected at later stages of growth (instead of the seedling plants that were affected in Texas). These latest reports reduce the hope that the adult plant resistance will stop the spread of the disease.

Stripe rust is also severe on TAM 112 and Endurance, but these varieties were already known to have considerable vulnerability to the disease. For good news, the stripe rust resistance in TAM 111 is still holding!

So what does all of this mean for us? Although it is really still too early to make a call on rust for our area, the rust to the south show our area still has a moderate risk for stripe and leaf rust. In most years, outbreaks of leaf or stripe rust at College Station will tend to move east; therefore the stripe rust at this location may not directly impact northwest Kansas or Kansas at all. It is also possible that "adult plant resistance", problems with wheat to the south or some other factor will slow the progress of disease.

Producers should keep up to date on the rust situation to the south. If additional reports of "disease hot spots" occur in Oklahoma, we need to be prepared to make economical decisions on fungicide treatments. Fungicide costs range from $4 to over $20 per acre, suggesting it could be important to start planning early.

Company recalls spice blends

Center wants new volunteers

National Volunteer Week, Sunday through Saturday, April 18 to 24, is used as a time to recognize and celebrate the efforts of volunteers at the local, state and national levels. This year's theme is "Celebrating People in Action."

Wheat Ridge Acres, a Goodland retirement community, appreciates the many special people who take the time to volunteer at its facility. Volunteers add variety and fun to our programs and companionship for our residents.

Volunteers of all ages are always welcome to play cards and other games, call bingo, bake for special occasions, help with manicures and entertain with music and dancing of all types. The ideas are endless and we'd love to hear your suggestions. If you are interested in getting involved as a volunteer, we'd be happy to talk with you! Call the Wheat Ridge Acres Activity Department at (785) 899-0100.
