Many people involved in salsa making now

For the last two or three weeks, many folks who enjoy eating have been involved in the salsa making process. You certainly don't have to be a gardener to enjoy making and eating salsa, but so much the better if you happen to have a few of the ingredients growing out in the backyard.

Right now, you can literally feel the "hurry hurry" attitude beginning to kick in, because we're only about three weeks away from the average first frost date here in northwest Kansas. We're talking to the tomato vines, encouraging them to produce just a little faster and we're enjoying the maturing peppers that add the 'kick" to the big pot of salsa simmering away on the stove.

Several people have told me they are using the salsa recipe in my recent book and are looking forward to see if it's as good as I insist. A few of you have told me there is no way they can accumulate 20 pounds of available. I'm glad I did that, but in retrospect, I should have made it less complicated for everyone by presenting the numbers for a smaller batch. Last week, I gave a "cut down" recipe to a friend that called for just five pounds of tomatoes, with the rest of the ingredients re-tomatoes at one time, the size of recipe most people can with wind and a couple of inches to produce this year, do yourself a better utilize unless you have a great of snow. big tomato patch. If you don't have my book and would like the recipe, in any size, just give me a call.

Indeed, you can almost feel the rush to stuff that home grown food into canning jars right now. The average first frost date in Sherman County is Oct. 10th. It's only an average of course, but last year, the temperature dropped to a record low of 29 degrees on Oct. 3rd, sufficiently ending the growing season for another year. The year before that, 2008, it wasn't until Oct. 23rd duced accordingly. That's probably that the temperature dropped to 31.

When a frost threatens, most of us rush to the garden and try to find a way to cover the tomatoes, even though you can be pretty sure that it will only be a few more days before another frost or freeze comes County is May 7th or 8th. Your along.

Talking to children key to relationships building and maintaining successful family relationships, yet parents who ask direct questions may miss finding out what's really going on in their child's life.

Asking "How was your day?" often will prompt a flat "Fine."

End of conversation? Not exactly, said Charles A. "Chuck" Smith, Kansas State University child development specialist, who encourages parents to begin sharing something unusual or interesting about their day in a way a child can understand.

"Once the story telling has begun, a child often will raise a hand, or interrupt, to share something about his or her day," Smith said.

"Engaging a child in conversation, rather than asking questions, takes the pressure off," said Smith, who explained that a child will be likely to tell you about what's hap-

matters of record

something else, such as riding along on an errand, helping to prepare a snack, working on a yard or garden project or helping to wash the car.

Listen for openings that invite casual conversation, and then followup, without passing judgment, said the child development specialist, who noted: "Building community with your child also helps to build memories.'
